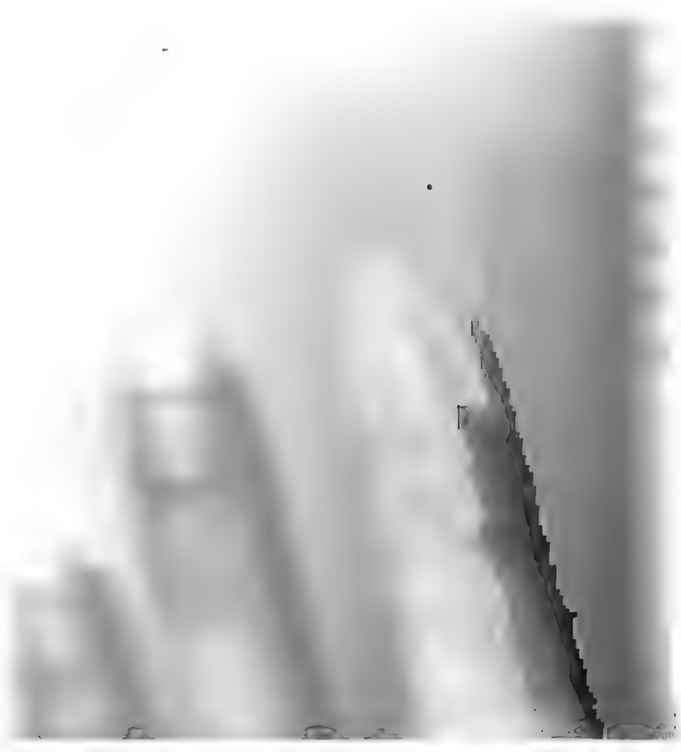
PREFACE

THE present volume, complementing the AMERICAN CATALOG 1900-1905 which contains in one alphabet by short-title entries the record of books from January 1, 1900, to January 1, 1905, completes the initial volumes for the first five-yearly period of the AMERICAN CATALOG series of the twentieth century. It is practically a reprint, systematized into one alphabet for each year, from the Weekly Record of the Publishers' Weekly, edited into consistent shape by the combination, for instance, of entries for several volumes of a book into one comprehensive entry, but not modified to bring up to date bibliographical particulars which may be subject to change. Thus in respect to price and publisher, the facts are given as at the time of first publication of the book, and in case of change of price or publisher, the later information should be sought in the single alphabet of the first volume. Entries of books not recorded within the year should also be looked for in that volume, which therefore contains more titles than the present one. Names of publishers will be found in the Directory of Publishers, prefacing the first volume.

The value of this second or supplementary volume is less for casual and daily reference than as a record of full bibliographical data. The annotations on new books given in the Publishers' Weekly will be found a very important feature, especially for permanent reference, in the library or in the bookshop. It is intended hereafter to issue as a part of the ANNUAL AMERICAN CATALOG a full-title annotated list for each year, supplementing the short-title alphabet comprising author, title, subject, and series entries. At the end of the five-yearly period, as well as at intervening dates, the short-title alphabet will be cumulated for the permanent record, and the several yearly alphabets of full-title entries and annotations may then be separated from the annual publication and bound together into a volume like the present. It is also intended to put aside a small edition of each year's full-title list so that these may be bound up together in the style of the present volume at the end of the period.



By means of these sets of two volumes each completed in permanent shape at the end of each five-yearly period, it is hoped to present a bibliographical record of American book production which shall be as comprehensive, adequate and accurate as the difficulties of the field permit.

The selections are from the published writings or reported sermons of Dr. Abbott, from the years 1895-1899, inclusive. Grouped under subject-headings as: The home, character, the world, work, the brotherhood of man, the church, faith and unfaith, prayer and special prayers, the Bible, the supernatural, evolution of religion and theology, God, Christ, the kingdom of heaven.

Abbott, Lyman, D.D. Salvation from sin. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1900.] c. 30 p. D. (What is worth while ser.) leatherette, 35 c.

Salvation is defined by Dr. Abbott as character, and he declares that life depends on this and not on our condition.

Abbott, Lyman, D.D. The supernatural. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1900.] c. '99-1900. 29 p. D. (What is worth while ser.) leatherette, 35 c.

Abbott, Lyman, D.D., ed. Hints for home reading; a series of papers on books and their use, by C: Dudley Warner, Hamilton Wright Mabie, E: Everett Hale, and others; ed. with introd. by Lyman Abbott, to which is added a Book buyer's guide. [Also] a Book record. N. Y., C: L. Bowman, 1900. c. '83, 1900. 4+220 p. S. flex. cl., $1.25.

A series of papers on books and their use by Charles Dudley Warner, Hamilton Wright Mabie, Edward Everett Hale, Lyman Abbott, Joseph Cook, Fred R. Perkins, M. F. Sweetser and others. The guide is a selection of 3000 books carefully chosen by experts from the A. L. A. Model library, from the Warner library of the world's best literature, etc. The book record is blank in which may be recorded the data, comment, etc., of one's favorite books.

Abhedânanda, Swâmi. Why is a Hindu a vegetarian? N. Y., Vedânta Soc., 1900. c. 17 p. 12°, pap., 10 c.

Achard, L: Amédée Eugène. The golden fleece (La toison d'or;) from the French; il. by Victor A. Searles. Bost., L. C. Page & Co., 1900. c. 435 p. il. 12°, cl., $1.50.

Ackerman, G. E., D.D. Love illumined; with introd. by G: T. Newcomb, D.D. Cin., Curts & Jennings, [1900.] c. 124 p. S. cl., 50 c.

The author calls his book "a few thoughts concerning holiness, sanctification, perfect love, perfection, purity.

Açvaghosha's discourse on the awakening of faith in the Mahâzâna; tr. for the first time from the Chinese version, by Teitaro Suzuki. Chic., Open Court Pub. Co., 1900. 4+160 p. 1 il. D. cl., net, $1.25.

Acvaghosha is the philosopher of Buddhism. His treatise on "The awakening of faith" is recognized by all northern schools and sects as orthodox and used even to-day in Chinese translations as a text book for the instruction of Buddhists priests.

Adachi, Kinnosuké. Iroka: tales of Japan. N. Y., Doubleday & McClure Co., 1900. c. 7+295 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Japanese stories written in English by a Japanese. It is perhaps the first time that the folklore, the life of the haughty Samurai class, the devotion to art, all that gives character to the ever-fascinating "Home land of the Sun," has been given to the English-speaking world by one who knows it as a native, not as an outsider.

Adams, Brooks. America's economic supremacy. N. Y., Macmillan, 1900. 9+222 p. 12°, cl., $1.25.

Adams, C: Francis. Charles Francis Adams, by his son. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1900. c. 7+426 p. D. (American statesmen, ed. by J: T. Morse.) cl., $1.25.

Contents: Birth and education; Early life; The Massachusetts legislature; The "Boston Whig"; The free-soil party; The ebb of the tide; The ante-bellum congress; The awakening; The proclamation of belligerency; Seward's foreign war panacea; The treaty of Paris; The Trent affair; A bout with the premier; The cotton famine; The crisis of recognition; The Emancipation proclamation; The Alabama and the "Laird rams." The years of fruition; The Geneva arbitration; Closing years.

Adams, C: Kendall, ed. Representative British orations; introd. and explanatory notes by C: Kendall Adams; with a supplementary volume by J: Alden. N. Y., Putnam, 1900. c. '84-1900. 4 v. 11+318; 3+308; 3+376; 5+370 p. D. cl., $5.

A selection of the more important and representative political addresses of the British statesmen of the past two centuries, with biographical notes, critical comment, and political, oratorical and literary estimate.

Adams, E: F. The modern farmer in his business relations. San Francisco, N. J. Stone Co., 1899. c. 662 p. il. diagram, cl., $2.

This work, first sold as a subscription book, is now given to the trade. It is "a study of some of the principles underlying the arts of profitable farming and marketing, and of the interests of farmers as effected by modern social and economical conditions and forces."

Adams, Francis Alexandre. The transgressors; story of a great sin: a political novel of the twentieth century. Phil., Independence Pub. Co., [1900.] c. 350 p. 12°, cl., $1.50.

Adams, Maude, in L'Aiglon, a drama in five acts by Edmond Rostand, adapted into English by L: N. Parker: a pictorial souvenir with the authorization of C: Frohman. N. Y., R. H. Russell, 1900. c. 13 il. por. O. pap., 25 c.

Adams, Mrs. Sarah Flower. Nearer, my God, to thee. N. Y., F. M. Buckles & Co., 1900. unp. sq. S. pap., 25 c.

Addison, Dan. Dulany. The clergy in American life and letters. N. Y., Macmillan, 1900. c. 10+400 p. D. (National studies in American letters ser., no. 1.) cl., $1.25.

The object is to present the literary work of the American clergy in its twofold aspect as the expression of religious life and national thought. This is done through sketches of some of our typical clergymen—as Dwight, Channing, Parker, Bushnell, Beecher, and Phillips Brooks, and chapters on "the clergy in American life," "early writers and historians," "poetry and romance," and "denominational literature."

Addison, Jos. Sir Roger de Coverley papers. Bost., H. M. Caldwell Co., [1900.] c. 2+104 p. 24°, (Remarque ed.) cl., 40 c.; leath., 75 c.

Addison, Jos. Sir Roger de Coverley papers. from the Spectator; ed. for school use by Laura J. Wylie. N. Y., Globe School Book Co., [1900.] c. 47+207 p. por. 12°, (English classics, star ser.) cl., 35 c.

Ade, G: More fables; il. by Clyde J. Newman. Chic., H. S. Stone & Co., 1900. c. 219 p. S. cl., $1.

Amusing sketches of the grass widow, the honest money-maker, the man grabber, the lodge fiend, and other figures of city life.

Adkins, Walter Bion. The Jericho road. Indianapolis. Hollenbeck Press, 1899. c. 226 p. por. D. cl., $1.

Eleven papers designed "to help Odd-Fellows in their search for the good things in life," entitled: Objects and purposes of Odd-Fellowship; The higher life; Pithey points; The Bible in Odd-Fellowship; Brother Underwood's dream; The imperial virtue; Quiet home thoughts; Love supreme; Gems of beauty; Husband and father; Odd-Fellowship and the future.

Adney, Tappan. The Klondike stampede. N. Y., Harper, 1900. c. '99. 12+471 p. il. O. cl., $3.

The author was one of the pioneers of the Klondike region, and lived among the gold-seekers during the stirring times of the gold-fever of 1897-98. The book is a narrative of Mr. Adney's experiences and observations. Not the least interesting feature is the great number of illustrations from drawings and photographs by the author.

Adventures of Odysseus; retold in English; il. by C: Robinson. N. Y., Dutton, 1900. 238 p. 12°, cl., $2.

Aesop. Fables; retold in words of one syllable, by Mary Godolphin. N. Y., A. L. Burt, 1900. c. '95. 128 p. il. 4°, (Burt's one syllable ser. for little folks.) cl., 50 c.

Aiken, C: Francis. The Dhamma of Gotama the Buddha and the Gospel of Jesus the Christ: a critical inquiry into the alleged relations of Buddhism with primitive Christianity. Bost., Marlier & Co., 1900. c. 16+348 p. D. cl., $1.50.

This work is partly the outcome of a series of lectures on Buddhism delivered by Prof. Aiken in the Catholic University of America, Washington, D. C. It has been written to meet a want keenly felt in the field of Christian apologetics. "The specious attempts," the author says, "to lay the gospels under obligation to Buddhist teaching have shaken the faith of not a few Christians. The need of a thorough refutation is imperative."

Aiken. J:, Barbauld, Mrs. Anna Letitia Aiken, and others. Eyes and no eyes; ed. with introd. and notes by M. V. O'Shea; il. by H. P. Barnes and C. M. Howard. Bost., Heath, 1900. c. 8+66 p. D. (Heath's home and school classics, no. 13.) pap., 10 c.

Aikin, W: A., M.D. The voice: its physiology and cultivation. N. Y., Macmillan, 1900. 102 p. il. 12°, cl., $1.

Alabama. Supreme ct. Reports of cases, during the Nov. terms, 1897-1898. v. 119, 120, 121. Phares Coleman, st. rep.; Ja. E. Cobb, ass't rep. Montgomery, Brown Print. Co., 1900. c. O. ea., shp., $3.75.

Alaska. The laws of Alaska, embracing the penal code, the code of criminal procedure, the political code, the code of civil procedure, and the civil code, with the treaty of cession, and all acts and parts of acts relating to the district; annot. with reference to decisions by the courts of the U. S., and the supreme ct. of Ore., by T: H. Carter. Chic., Callaghan & Co., 1900. c. 39+533 p. O. cl., $10.

Albee, Helen R. Mountain playmates. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1900. c. 5+271 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Mt. Chocorua, Vermont, is the scene. The playmates settled upon an abandoned farm and began the manufacture of rugs, soon affording a means of livelihood to many people in the neighborhood. A genial philosophy and light humor make the book amusing.

Alcott, Louisa May. The candy country. [New issue.] Bost., Little, Brown & Co., [1900.] c. '85, 1900. 2+52 p. il. S. (Children's friend ser.) cl., 50 c.

Alcott, Louisa May. Poppies and wheat. [New issue.] Bost., Little, Brown & Co., [1900.] c. '87, 1900. 2+54 p. il. D. (Children's friend ser.) cl., 50 c.

Alden, Mrs. Isabella Macdonald, ["Pansy," pseud.] Missent: the story of a letter. Bost., Lothrop Pub. Co., 1900. c. 4-175 p. D. cl., 75 c.

A story of misunderstandings, complications and explanations, with a palpable thread of romance; certain Christmas doings, and some wise conclusions, all arising from a missent postal card.

Alden, Mrs. Isabella Macdonald, ["Pansy," pseud.,] and Livingstone, Mrs. C. M. By way of the wilderness. Bost., Lothrop Pub. Co., [1900.] c. '99. 2-394 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

The hero of the story—Wayne Pierson—through the familiar stepmother complication, finds himself misjudged and misunderstood in his home, which he finally leaves, on impulse, with a college career uncompleted and the attempt at reconciliation incomplete. The book is, indeed, largely a story of impulses, for the hero is repeatedly brought face to face with crises engendered by his own honest but unbalanced impulses. Even in an unforeseen love affair this is the cause of trouble and misunderstanding.

Alden, Raymond Macdonald. The art of debate. N. Y., H. Holt & Co., 1900. c. 15+279 p. D. cl., net, $1.

A large part of the contents is based on material originally prepared for students of argumentation at Harvard College and the University of Pennsylvania, where the writer is now instructor. In its present form the book is designed to be helpful to those interested in any form of debate. The legal argument has been largely taken as the basis for the general subject of debate.

Aldrich, Fred Davis, and Foster, Irving Lysander. Foundations of French arranged for beginners in preparatory schools and colleges. Bost., Ginn, 1900. c. 15+177 p. D. cl., 95 c.

Aldrich, G: I., and Forbes, Alex. Progressive course in reading: first, second, and third books. N. Y., Butler, Sheldon & Co., 1900. c. '99-1900. First bk., 132 p. il. D. cl., 20 c.; Second bk., 176 p. il. D. cl., 30 c.; Third bk., 272 p. il. D. cl., 40 c.

Contents: Bk. 1, Pictures, rhymes, and stories. Bk. 2, Stories, verses, nature studies. Bk. 3, Stories, studies, rhymes, riddles.

Aldrich, T: Bailey. Works. Popular ed. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1900. 7 v. 12°, cl., $10: hf. cf., $20.

Contents: v. 1, Marjorie Daw and other people; v. 2, Prudence Palfrey; v. 3, The Queen of Sheba; v. 4, The Stillwater tragedy; v. 5, The story of a bad boy; v. 6, Two bites at a cherry; v. 7, Poems.

Alexander, Mrs. Cecil Frances Humphreys. He is risen! He is risen. N. Y., F. M. Buckles & Co., 1900. unp. sq. S. pap., 25 c.

Alexander, Francesca. The hidden servants, and other very old servants told over again. Bost., Little, Brown & Co., 1900. c. 17+234 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Francesca Alexander was for years an intimate friend of Ruskin, and her home in Florence is a literary centre. These rhymed versions of Italian stories and legends have a deeply religious significance which will appeal to all spiritually minded people. Some of them were derived from old and curious Italian books read by the author years ago. Others have introductions showing that the writer took them from the lips of Italian peasants or Italian friends.

Alford, G: Howard. Willis; or, the model farmer. Akron, O., Saalfield Pub. Co., 1900. c. 4-184 p. por. S. pap., 35 c.

The author advocates farming as a means of existence for those who would lead a happy life. "Willis" was born in 1870 and the practical farm life and machinery described is fully up to date.

Alger, Horatio, jr. A debt of honor: the story of Gerald Lane's success in the far west. N. Y. A. L. Burt, 1900. c. 4+302 p. il. 12°, (Alger ser.) cl., $1.

Alger, Horatio, jr. Falling in with fortune; or, the experiences of a young secretary; completed by Arthur M. Winfield. N. Y., Mershon Co., [1900.] c. 6+282 p. pl. D. cl., $1.25.

Alger, Horatio, jr. Jed the poorhouse boy. Phil., H: T. Coates & Co., 1900. c. '99. 4+363 p. il. D. cl., $1.

Jed introduced at sixteen, had been for fourteen years an inmate of the Scranton poorhouse. He leaves it and goes on the stage, and after many ups and downs of fortune, makes the discovery that he is the heir of an English title and estate.

Alger, Horatio, jr. Out for business; or, Robert Frost's strange career; completed by Arthur M. Winfield. N. Y., Mershon Co., [1900.] c. 287 p. pl. 12°, cl., $1.25.

All about animals; facts, stories, and anecdotes. N. Y., McLoughlin Bros., [1900.] c. 286 p. il. Q. bds., 50 c.

Allbut, Rob. Rambles in Dickensland; with introd. by Gerald Brenan; il. by Helen M. James. N. Y., Truslove, Hanson & Comba, Ltd., 1899. il. 12°, $1.50.

Alleman, Julia Suesserott. Postmarked "Colima." Phil., Lutheran Pub. Soc., [1900.] c. 5+353 p. D. (John Rung prize ser.) cl., $1.25.

A lost letter which cruelly changes the lives of two people who love each other is the episode upon which the story is based. A young girl promises her lifelong friend, who is a sea captain, and who offers her his hand on starting off on a year's voyage, to send her answer to a little Mexican port, where the ship is to touch. The letter is lost by the captain's messenger, only coming to hand from the Dead Letter Office, twenty-five years afterwards.

Allen, C: Notes on the Bacon-Shakespeare question. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1900. c. 14+306 p. D. cl., $1.50.

An attempt to throw some new light upon the still vexed question of the authorship of the plays and poems which bear Shakespeare's name. The writer thinks that the Baconian argument from the legal knowledge shown in the plays is of slight weight, and has not heretofore been adequately met. He has therefore endeavored with some elaboration to make it plain that this legal knowledge was not extraordinary, or such as to imply that the author was educated as a lawyer, or even as a lawyer's clerk. Author is late judge of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts. His work is a digest of all the direct and indirect evidence on the subjects and will be found more satisfactory to Shakespeareans than to Baconians.

Hilda Wade was the daughter of a very learned physician, who had died in consequence of disgrace brought upon him by a rival physician and scholar in the same field. To clear her father's name, and bring to justice the true criminal, Hilda becomes hospital nurse and follows the great scientist to South Africa, where she finally learns the truth. Grant Allen died while writing this book and it was finished according to his own instructions by his intimate friend, Dr. Conan Doyle.

The hero is a young Kentuckian of small schooling, who has grown up in the faith that the Bible is literally true. A college is organized in Lexington for the making of ministers, in which the young man enters as student. The story shows his gradual awakening to the many different beliefs in the world, and the final undermining of his own faith. He leaves college after two years and returns to his poor home. A woman comes into his life, far above him in station, who knows little of theology, but who reconciles him to life and the truest religion.

John Graham, a refined, scholarly man, is convicted through circumstantial evidence of having murdered a fellow townsman, who had mysteriously disappeared with a large sum of money. He is sentenced to imprisonment for life. His son only knows his father is in prison when he reaches his sixteenth year. Then he is so convinced of his father's innocence that he makes it his life work to prove that he did not commit the murder. There is a long succession of detective episodes in which a gold button, with a head of Pasht on, plays a part.

As the nineteenth century put an end to slavery the twentieth should put an end to war. The author points out that "no matter how wide-spread love of peace be in our days, war will always remain the lot of man while he is most affected by what is vicious in collective action, national and international. . . . Only when all government activity in legal and independent kingdoms is full of the consciousness of the necessity of free and energetic co-operation, universal and social, then only will war disappear." Much labor and great self-sacrifice must bring about the end of war.

Atherton, Mrs. Gertrude Franklin, ["Frank Lin," pseud.] Senator North. N. Y., J: Lane, 1900. c. 4+367 p. D cl., $1.50.

"Senator North" is a composite portrait of our best types of public men. He is represented as a man of sixty, of high intellectual attainments, of untarnished reputation, a Republcan leader in the Senate. The scene is Washington, the time at the outbreak of our war with Spain. A good picture is given of public sentiment at the time, and of the party in opposition to war. "Senator North" attracts a charming young girl, brilliantly educated and of a prominent Southern family. Their influence upon each other's lives is the story.

The purpose is to aid those teachers and lecturers who desire to illustrate their work, and yet feel that they have not the ability to draw. The author has prepared a series of lessons which develop this ability by easy stages. The lessons begin with simple drills in straight lines and circles. Gradually they grow more difficult, until the pupil who has practised faithfully is able to draw any ordinary picture.

Theodore Beza was born at Vezelay, France, June 24, 1519, died at Geneva, October 15, 1605. He was a noted theologian, the successor of Calvin as leader of the Reformed Church at Geneva. For his facts the author has gone back to the original sources, most of all to Beza's own autobiographical notes and to his letters, and to Beza's extended treatises. Follows the original plan of the series of making the volumes critical biographies and not mere eulogies. Bibliography (5 p.).

Balzac, Honoré de. Letters to Madame Hanska, born Countess Rzewûska afterwards Madame Honoré de Balzac, 1833-1846; tr. by Katherine Prescott Wormeley. Bost., Hardy, Pratt & Co., 1900. c. 17+755 p. D. hf. mor., $1.50.

Miss Wormeley says in her preface: "The simple story of these letters is as folows. In February, 1833, Balzac received a letter, posted in Russia, from a lady who signed herself "l'Etrangere" ("Foreiger.") This letter is not known to exist, nor is there any authentic knowledge of its contents; but it began a correspondence between its writer and Balzac which ended in their marriage in 1850."

Banfield, Frank. John Wesley. Bost., Small, Maynard & Co., 1900. c. 16+128 p. por. T. (Westminster biographies.) cl., 75 c.

The author uses his limited space to tell readably the well-known facts of the life of Wesley. He proves that Wesley "helped materially in the gradual lifting of Anglo-Saxondom out of the Paganism in which it was wallowing part of the way on the road back towards a perfect Christianity." In the more important crises of his life he lets Wesley be his own biographer.

Bangs, J: Kendrick. The booming of Acre Hill, and other reminiscences of urban and suburban life; il. by C. Dana Gibson. N. Y., Harper, 1900. c. 9+266 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A collection of short stories in which certain phases of the social life of to-day are treated in a genially satirical manner. The bulk of the volume deals with some of the amusing problems confronting those who dwell in small but growing cities. The encroachments of the "land boomers," who design uncomfortable homes for the unwary; the difficulties confronting those who interest themselves in church matters; the complications of life below-stairs, as well as life upstairs; the vagaries of surburban politics—all these topics form the burden of the stories of life in country communities.

Bangs, J: Kendrick. The idiot at home; il. by F. T. Richards. N. Y., Harper, 1900. c. 9+314 p D. cl., $1.25.

Mr. Bangs introduces the reader to the home life of the idiot of "Coffee and repartee." With a wife and two active children, he lives in a suburban home of his own, and is again the centre of many laughable episodes. The sage remarks of "Mrs. Idiot," the restful hired man Michael, the impressible Tommy and Molly, and even the cook will be found delightfully funny.

In this new book by Dr. Banks, the author's skill in stating and illustrating familiar truths in an impressive and winning manner, is strikingly evidenced. The author has arranged several hundred simple truths in paragraphs appropriately headed in full face type. The truths are explained in a few terse sentences and then verses, entire poems, or prose selections having direct bearing on the truth are added, forming a perfect storehouse of suggestive material for the preacher and writer.

A sequel to "The bow of orange ribbon." The year 1791 in the city of New York was a momentous one. The question whether New York or Philadelphia should be the seat of government led to many hot discussions and much ill-feeling. The death of Benjamin Franklin, the great influx of French refugees and the division of opinion regarding English rights in the lost colonies make up the story. The love motive is secondary.

Barry, W: Arden Massiter. N. Y., Century Co., 1900. c. 7+388 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Arden Massiter is a young English socialist of high birth, who, having quarrelled with his father, goes to Rome as correspondent for a London socialist paper. In his attempt to meet one Tiberio Sforza, whom he had known previously as an anarchist in London, he happens to kill a man, a member of the Camorra, in a tavern brawl. The blow thus struck sets in motion forces which eventually cause the complete ruin of the noble family of the Sorelli, with whom in their old-world fortress of Roccaforte, Massiter takes refuge. A lovely princess, brigands, conspirators, and statesmen aid in making a complicated plot. By the author of "The two standards."

In 1860, Pine Knot, the scene of the story was assumed to be exactly on the boundary line of Kentucky and Tennessee. To the discomfiture of the "moonlight fraternity," however, a later survey proved that the town was in Kentucky. The present novel is founded on local incidents supposed to have happened just before the Civil War. It tells the love story of a federal soldier and a confederate girl. By the author of "A hero in homespun."

The scene of the story like that of "At You-All's house" is laid in Northern Missouri. It is a country love story of the late "Sixties," when the political issues of that part of Missouri were deeply swayed by the disputes of the Immersionists and the Paedo-Baptists. Around one of these disputes Mr. Baskett has written the thread of his story which presents a striking picture of the features and customs of the rural Mississippi valley.

Bellamy, E: The Duke of Stockbridge: a romance of Shay's Rebellion. N. Y., Silver, Burdett & Co., 1900. c. 11+371 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

"The Duke of Stockbridge" was written by the author of "Looking backward" in 1879, before he wrote the later volume. He delayed publishing it till after he had issued "Looking backward" and died before seeing it published. It is the story of the great revolt of the debtor-farmers of Massachusetts against their oppresive creditors and the cruel courts in 1786. The adventure and romance of an officer of the Continental Army who became a leader in this spirited revolt, and who loved the courtly belle of Western Massachusetts, make the theme of the novel.

Benedict, Roswell A. Tim, Tam, and Tom settling the tariff-trust question: a debate. N. Y., Rohde & Haskins, [1900.] 6+117 p. il. D. pap., 25 c.

Claims to be a report of a series of conversations overheard by a newspaper man in 1895, and again in 1899, between three intelligent railroad employes, making improvements on a leading railroad. The debate is at the dinner hour, a closed factory within sight of the men with its smokeless chimney, being the text. The two debates give very fairly both sides of low and high tariff as illustrated in the workings of the Wilson law of 1895, and the Dingley law of 1899. The trust question is particularly discussed in the concluding conversations, also the immigrant question; two suggestions being made toward a practical solution of the former.

Benton, Kate A. Geber: a tale of the reign of Harun al Reschid, Khalif of Baghdad. N. Y., F. A. Stokes Co., [1900.] c. 5+487 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The time is in the year 786 A. D. and of the Hegira 170. Harun is the "Haroun" whose name the "Arabian nights" has made so familiar to us. The plot is the explanation of the fall of the house of Barmek at the hands of Harun and his sacrifice of his friend and favorite, Jaafar, one of the puzzles of history. The love of Rafi for Oleija, the khalif's sister, is a thread of romance that runs through and brightens the darker fabric of the story. A number of original poems embellish the narrative.

Besant, Sir Walter. The alabaster box. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1900. c. '99. 3+327 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A story of settlement life; it is shown from actual knowledge and observation the effect of the life upon the workers. The principal figure is a young man of wealth who is ambitious and able. He goes to the settlement out of curiosity, and the way the work and the people with whom he comes in contact change his entire character and his views of life forms the backbone of the story. The figures are drawn from the author's experience.

A romance of modern days with English rural background. The child of the "fourth generation" discovers facts carefully concealed for seventy years. His great-grandfather had not spoken one word for seventy years since a crime was committed that cost the lives of his young wife and her brother. The love story of the fourth generation recalls the love story of the first. The hero objects strongly to the injustice of the Bible prophecy of retribution.

"This life of Paul of Tarsus is written with a fresh aim, and on a new plan. It is intended to be read with the interest of biography and the accuracy of history, in which thoughts, scenes, and events are woven into one. . . . I have already tried in "Jesus, the carpenter of Nazareth" to set forth Jesus as the friend of little children, and in this book I would present to young readers the living figure of Paul, not so much as the inspired teacher —but as the Pharisee whose life was changed at thirty from a fierce and violent hater of Jesus to an ardent lover."—Preface.

Blanchan, Neltje, [pseud. for Mrs. Nellie Blanchan (De Graff) Doubleday.] Nature's garden: an aid to knowledge of our wild flowers and their insect visitors; with col. pls. and il. photographed from nature, by H: Troth and A. R. Dugmore. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1900. c. 16+415 p. sq. O. cl., $3.

Intimate life-histories of over five hundred species of wild flowers, written in untechnical language, emphasize for the first time in a popular book the marvellously interesting and vital relationship existing between these flowers and the special insect to which each is adapted. The flowers are divided into five color groups, because by this arrangement anyone with no knowledge of botany whatever can readily identify the specimens met during a walk. The various popular names by which each species is known, its preferred dwelling-place, months of blooming and geographical distribution follow its description. Lists of berry-bearing and other plants most conspicuous after the flowering season, of such as grow together in different kinds of soil, and finally of family groups arranged by that method of scientific classification adopted by the International Botanical Congress are also given.

The part the south took in the revolutionary war—the burning of Norfolk, the downfall of Savannah and Charleston, and the final series of American victories which led to the surrender of Yorktown—form the historical background. The heroine is the daughter of a North Carolina regular, who goes to live with her grandfather, a staunch Royalist, in Virginia. Many altercations ensue between the two, and many odd adventures happen to the young lady.

Proceeding with his story of "The people of the Netherlands," says the translator, Prof. Blok devotes v. 3 and 4 to an account of the eighty years war. His narrative covers the history of the revolt against Spain, 1568, to the treaty of Munster. 1648. The years 1559-1568, he treats as forming the prologue of the struggle to independence. According to Prof. Blok's plan this material was to be included in one volume of the English version, in which the greater weight is given to social and economic conditions than to the political affairs of the people, but the subject demanded closer study and more detail; therefore part 3 now comprises v. 3 and half of v. 4 of the original from 1559 to the end of the Truce, 1621.

Blouët, Paul ["Max O'Rell," pseud.] Woman and artist. N. Y., Harper, 1900. c. 5+228 p. D. cl., $1.25.
The plot of the story introduces a London artist who invents a rifle which he sells to the French Government and ultimately to the Russian Government. He gets a million from the French for his invention, and in his endeavors to sell the same invention to the Russian Government his wife, who aids him, is placed in an awkward situation with a Russian general who must report on the merits of the invention. An ingeniously conceived plan enables the wife to escape in time to save her honor.

shon Co., 1900. c. '99, 1900. 6+270 p. il. D. (Flag of freedom ser.) cl., $1.25.

This story has its scene first in the United States, afterwards in Cuba, during the late war, the hero taking part in the downfall of Santiago. Paul Graham is forced to make his own way in the world, and having a strong taste for music, becomes a musician, and joins, first a theatrical company, and then a regular band, of which he, later on, becomes the bandmaster.

Bonesteel, Mrs. Mary G. A hostage of war. N. Y., Benziger Bros., 1900. c. '99. 155 p. il. S. bds., 40 c.

A tale of life at a military post on the frontier. Army officers, Indians, young and old, a bad agent, a clear-headed young chaplain are among those who figure in the story. The chief character is Master Jack Hollingsworth, the colonel's little boy. The many adventures are founded on fact, the writer being the daughter of a general in the regular army.

Bonner, Geraldine. Hard-pan: a story of bonanza fortunes. N. Y., Century Co., 1900. c. 2+279 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A story of the San Francisco of to-day, presenting many pen-pictures of California society. The heroine, Viola Reed, is the beautiful but unspoiled daughter of one of the bonanza kings, who had lost his fortune. The plot turns upon the father borrowing money from the daughter's rich lover, John Gault. When the girl finds it out, she insists upon paying it back, sells their little house and removes to another city. The ending the reader must discover for himself.

Bonsal, Stephen, ed. The golden horseshoe: extracts from the letters of Captain H. L. Herndon, of the 21st U. S. Infantry, on duty in the Philippine Islands, and Lieutenant Lawrence Gill, A.D.C. to the military Governor of Puerto Rico; with a postscript by J. Sherman, private Co. D, 21st Infantry. N. Y., Macmillan, 1900. c. 10+316 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The letters of which this volume is made up really passed between two friends, officers in the U. S. Army, during the year 1899, their names, for obvious reasons, having been changed to "Lieutenant Gill" and "Captain Herndon." They are dated from Puerto Rico, from on board the U. S. transport Sherman on its way to Manila, and from Luzon. Interesting descriptions are given of the various ports of China and Japan, at which the Sherman made a brief stoppage, this all being secondary or supplemental, however, to Captain Herndon's views and endorsement of an expansion policy, and his intelligent opinions on our many eastern problems.

Deals daringly with the fashionable life of London. The story is told by the court modiste, in whose elegantly fitted rooms the fashionable set met to nibble the confections and cakes, taste the wines, try on the hats and gossip. A tactful Irishman from Paris, who knows his profession, and understands how to flatter, comes into the modiste's business at a critical moment.

Bower, Marian. John Thisselton. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1900. c. 2+402 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Published in England under the title "The puppet show." John Thisselton learns of insanity in his family on the day of his coming of age, and deciding never to marry, leaves his entailed estates rented to a French step-mother and half-brother. In the course of his wanderings his resolution is severely tested. Four love stories run through the novel. The curtain rises first upon one, then upon another as in a puppet show. The scenes are England, France, and Italy.

Bowker, R: Rogers. The arts of life. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1900. c. 6+306 p. D. cl., $1.25.

In the midst of his active business and political life the author has formulated a philosophy of life aiming to bring out the highest possibilities of man's powers and to encourage his most far-reaching ideals. He holds that life is an art for the perfection of which all the arts are intended. The defect of civilization is that it has interfered with this conscious and purposed art of living. Education, business, politics, and religion are the chief occupations of man, and this series of essays shows what they may become in a life dedicated to the noblest and best. The book is dedicated "In His Name and with the names of Paul the world-apostle, Darwin, Spencer, Gladstone, world's men all."

Brady, Cyrus Townsend. Commodore Paul Jones. N. Y., Appleton, 1900. c. 11+480 p. D. (Great commanders ser.; ed. by Ja. Grant Wilson.) cl., $1.50.
The author of "For the freedom of the sea" tells the story of Paul Jones as attractively as if he were writing fiction. He admits his strong admiration for the great sailor, which was not diminished by the most careful investigation. While not blind to his faults he brings out all that was fine and admirable in his character He has made use of all known works on the subject, and had opened to him many new sources.

Brady, Cyrus Townsend. The grip of honor: a story of Paul Jones and the American Revolution. N. Y., Scribner, 1900. c. 11+246 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.
The author of "For the freedom of the sea" introduces Paul Jones as commander first of the Ranger then of the Bon Homme Richard. While on the first ship his first lieutenant commands the boat that rescues a high-born English girl from a wreck. He is detailed to escort her to her people in England. As an American officer he meets with insulting treatment from the officer engaged to the heroine. The love story is complicated. The historical facts and the final battle between the Serapis and the Bon Homme Richard are given with all the author's old spirit.

Brady, Cyrus Townsend. Recollections of a missionary in the Great West. N. Y., Scribner, 1900. c. 8+200 p. por. D. cl., $1.25.
Anecdotes and reminiscences culled from the author's own experience as a missionary in the great West ten or fifteen years ago. Full of humor and of other winning phases of human nature, they give a broad picture of the daily life of a missionary. They illustrate the serious side of the life as well—the unselfish devotion to the work of helping one's fellowmen characteristic of the true missionary. Author of "For love of country," "For the freedom of the sea," etc.

The hero whom the author says "was nothing but a common sailor" is offered as " a type of the plain American blue jacket of the beginning of our navy." In the war with France, Reuben James was captured by a French privateer, and afterward fought on the Constellation; later he was on the United States and volunteered under Decatur for the destruction of the Philadelphia at Tripoli. After other and varied service he fought on the United States against the Macedonian, and he was on the President when she was captured, and on the Guerriere when she captured the Mashouda.

Brady, Cyrus Townsend. Stephen Decatur. Bost., Small, Maynard & Co., 1900. c. 18+142 p. T. (Beacon biographies.) cl., 75 c.
Stephen Decatur was the most conspicuous figure in the naval history of the United States for the hundred years between Paul Jones and Farragut. For an accurate presentation of his life the author has drawn freely upon all available sources of information, including many manuscripts, letters, and other interesting matter in the possession of his descendants and in the library of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania.

The literature has been presented in its relation to the larger life of the nation, and to the literatures of England and the continent of Europe, for only so can American literature be completely understood and its significance perceived. The greater writers have the larger amount of space given them, although the minor authors have not been neglected. The appendix contains nearly forty pages of extracts from not easily accessible colonial writers; also, valuable notes concerning our early newspapers and magazines, a bibliography of colonial and revolutionary literature (13 p.), a reference list of books and articles, and index.

Brooke, Emma. The engrafted rose: a novel. Chic., H. S. Stone & Co., 1900. c. 149 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The author of "A superfluous woman" lays her story in rural England in the years between 1847 and 1867, when originality in women still startled their associates. The "Engrafted rose" was exchanged for a still-born little girl by the midwife, and was reared in a rich mill-owner's family and carefully and conventionally taught. At seventeen her original, artistic nature breaks out. Her scientist lover fails to win her. For revenge a dismissed servant tells the history of her birth which makes her heiress of the great house of Clavel. She is a musician and a Stradivarius violin is of moment in the plot.

Brooks, Elbridge Streeter. The century book of the American colonies: the story of the pilgrimage of a party of young people to the sites of the earliest American colonies; introd. by F: J. De Peyster. N. Y., Century Co., [1900.] c. 10+233 p. il. O. cl., $1.50.

Beginning with Florida and Louisiana our old friends Uncle Tom Dunlap and his nephews and nieces, visit the first settlements of the colonies, along the coast to New York and through the New England States to the State of Maine. The history connected with these places is interestingly related, and the early struggles, physical hardships, religious persecutions of the settlers fully dealt with.

Brooks, Elbridge Streeter. The godson of Lafayette: being the story of young Joe Harvey, and how he found the way to duty in the days of Webster and Jackson and the conspiracy of that American adventurer Eleazor Williams sometimes called "the false Dauphin"; il. by Frank T. Merrill. Bost. and Chic., W. A. Wilde Co., [1900.] c. 3-333 p. D. (Sons of the republic ser., v. 2.) cl., $1.50.

Primarily the story of the disloyalty and strategy of the Rev. Eleazer Williams, who was possessed with the belief that he was the lost Dauphin of France, son of Louis XVI., and in line to the throne. The hero is for a time influenced by the "false Dauphin" and follows his fortunes, in his schemes of empire—that is the uniting of the Indians of America into one great Confederacy, which should dominate and control the west.

Brooks, Elbridge Streeter. Story of the nineteenth century of the Christian era. Bost., Lothrop Pub. Co, [1900.] c. 409 p. il. pors. O. cl., $1.50.

Mr. Brooks takes the convenient round numbers of 1800 to 1900, inclusive, as constituting the nineteenth century. It is the world's progress and achievement in these one hundred years that his story tells. The first chapter is a vivid picture of "How the century began." After this the narrative is divided into ten periods as "The age of Napoleon," "The age of Wellington,"—the other periods being named for Bolivar, Jackson, Kossuth, Cavour, Lincoln, Bismarck, Tolstoi, and Edison. Followed by a chronological record of the nineteenth century.

Brooks, Elbridge Streeter. With Lawton and Roberts: a boy's adventures in the Philippines and the Transvaal; il. by C. Chase Emerson. Bost., Lothrop Pub. Co., [1900.] c. 6+318 p. D. (Young defenders ser., no. 1.) cl., $1.25.

A story of adventure and battle, based upon the most picturesque and striking incidents in the latest campaigns of two modern heroes of Anglo-Saxon blood—Lawton the American, and Roberts the Englishman. Into the merits of the causes in defence of which each led his troops to victory, the story does not enter.

Brooks, Geraldine. Dames and daughters of colonial days. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1900.] c. 5+284 p. il. O. cl., $1.50.

The dames and daughters who are given place in this attractive volume are: Anne Hutchinson, of Bay Colony; Madame La Tour, of Acadia; Margaret Brent, of Maryland; Madam Sarah Knight, of Massachusetts and Connecticut; Eliza Lucas, of the Carolinas; Martha Washington, of Virginia; Abigail Adams, of Massachusetts; Betsy Schuyler, of New York, and Deborah Norris and Sally Wister, of Pennsylvania. All sections of the colonies and all phases of colonial life are thus represented.

A distinctively American novel, treating entertainingly of personal, artistic, and social evolution. Most of its action takes place in New York, although its earlier scenes are in a New Jersey town, and others occur on the coast of Maine and among the New Hampshire mountains. The story has chiefly to do with three young persons—one who means to win fame as a poet, another who hopes to become a great actor, and another who adopts portrait painting as a profession.

Brown, Annie G. Fireside battles: a story; il. by Jos. C. Leyendecker. Chic., Laird & Lee, [1900.] c. 3-327 p. O. cl., $1.25.

A story of American home life, which treats of the hardships as well as the pleasures in the life of a family who learned to be self-dependent after the death of the father. The interest centres in the action of the thoughtless, but lovable mother and in the persistent efforts of the heroine to conquer poverty, ill-will, and discouragement. The scenes are southern.

Brown, Caroline. Knights in fustian: a war time story of Indiana. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1900. c. 6+279 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A novel dealing with the "Copperhead" insurrection incited by Clement L. Vallandigham in Indiana in 1863. This organized opposition to the Federal government during the War for the Union was highly important in its possibilities, and by no means insignificant in its actual results. The book presents pictures of the chief characters involved, especially Governor Morton. There is a love story skillfully interwoven.

Author is pastor-emeritus of the First Congregational Church, Newark, N. J. He says: "In the summer of 1897, I came clearly to see that the problem of man's destiny was closely interlinked with every one of the great doctrines of the Christian faith, and must be studied in connection with them, each throwing such light upon the future life as it naturally contained. I seemed to see that if these gleams of light, from many sources, could be gathered into a common centre, they might disclose the right solution of man's destiny. . . . I saw the necessity of revising, and at times almost revolutionizing, some venerable theological conclusions, chiefly along metaphysical lines."

Browne, Mrs. Lida Briggs. Words that burn: a romance. Utica, N. Y., Daniel B. Briggs, 1900. c. 2+366 p. por. D. cl., $1.50.

The story is based upon the fact of an English girl of noble birth marrying an American in opposition to her father's wishes. The American is a business man and soon becomes wealthy; the story has its scene mostly in their handsome home in a suburban American town. The story is a simple one of home life and of love and marriage.

Buchan, J: The half-hearted. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1900. c. 4+367 p. D. cl., $1.50.
Beautiful Scotch scenery and an original Scotch hero make "The half-hearted" readable. A most elaborate education and abundant means have given a young Scotchman such an all-round view of all things that he is never ready to make a quick decision or take advantage of circumstances. In love and politics this state of mind proves fatal. In later life in India he proves himself the man for the hour of his country's greatest need.

Buchanan, Rob. Williams. Andromeda: an idyll of the great river. Phil., Lippincott, 1900. 4-413 p. D. cl., $1.25.
Two English artists visiting Canvey Island chance to meet a very beautiful girl, known, much against her will, by the name of "Anniedromedy," and one of the painters wins her affection. The girl subsequently receives a small fortune, sent by the seafaring man to whom she was married in her early girl hood, and whom she had almost entirely forgotten. Believing him dead she again allows herself to think of the artist, when the husband returns unexpectedly and tries to kill his rival. There is a tragical though satisfactory ending.

An innocent man, accused of the murder of the father of the girl he is going to marry, and a priest who has received under the seal of confession, the secret of the real murderer, which his vows forbid him to reveal, are the leading characters. The story is told by a London physician, Dr. Sutherland, who goes to the west of Ireland, the scene of the story, on a vacation tour. He becomes mixed up with all the characters of the narrative, playing both detective and friend.

An easy introduction to the study of the Egyptian hieroglyphic inscriptions; contains a short account of the decipherment of Egyptian hieroglyphics, a sketch of the hieroglyphic system of writing and of the general principles which underlie the use of picture signs to express thought. The main facts of Egyptian grammar are given in a series of short chapters, and these are illustrated by numerous brief extracts from hieroglyphic texts; each extract is printed in hieroglyphic type and is accompanied by a transliteration and translation.

This volume supplements the first volume of the series in which is set forth the more noble and more beautiful side of the beliefs of the ancient Egyptians. It relates to beliefs held by some regarding magical stones or amulets, magical figures, pictures, and formulæ, spells, names, ceremonies, etc.; also to demoniacal possessions, dreams, ghosts, and the worship of animals. A chapter on antiquity of magical practices in Egypt.

Buehler, Huber Gray. A modern English grammar. N. Y., Newson & Co., [1900.] c. 7+300 p. D. cl., 60 c.
The author calls this "an attempt to present the grammar of modern English in the manner prescribed by modern methods of instruction." . . . "With regard to arrangement," he says "the starting point is the sentence. . . . With regard to method, the presentation is as far as possible inductive, taking familiarity with English for granted, and leading the pupil to observe, compare, and classify grammatical facts for himself."

as the definitive one. It is the result of fourteen years' researches in England, France and St. Petersburg, as well as in this country, compiled from original sources—Jones's letters and journals, contemporary pamphlets, memoirs, etc. It reveals many hitherto unknown chapters of a remarkable career, of which the most romantic figure in American Revolutionary history is the hero. The appendix contains an account of the portraits of Paul Jones, the rosters of the Ranger, the Bon Homme Richard and the Serapis, and a list of works consulted (4 p.) Index.

A companion volume to the revised edition of Bulfinch's "Age of fable." No one can read this edition of the "Age of chivalry" without coming in contact with the best literature on the Arthurian legends. While retaining the old the editor has at the same time created a new work. The interest of these legends naturally centres about King Arthur and Queen Guinevere. In the case of Guinevere a new section has been added and an enlarged chapter treats of Arthur and the passing of his kingdom; an additional section too has been written for Launcelot and Elaine; and a new chapter added on "Mediæval legends."

Burns, Ja. Jesse. Story of English kings according to Shakespeare. N. Y., Appleton, 1899. c. 16+272 p. il. D. (Appleton's home-reading books, ed. by W: T. Harris, division 4, literature.) cl., 65 c.

The stories of Richard II., Henry IV., V., VI., and VIII., Edward IV., Richard III., and Falstaff largely given in extracts from Shakespeare's plays, connected together with a slight text explaining missing links and making a continuous story. "The term king," the author says, "is used with due intention, including Falstaff, the king of the realm of humor."

Burns, Rob. Complete poetical works; with biographical introd., notes and glossary. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., 1900. c. 2 v., 38+220; 221+442 p. il. por. O. cl., per set, $4.

The present two-volume edition consists of a text carefully compared with all the most reliable editions, and is claimed to be the completest ever published, as it contains several poems recently discovered. A carefully written biographical sketch is based on authentic records, and places the poet's life and character before the reader in a kindly light. There is a full index to the poems and also an index to the first lines. Also a full and excellent glossary.

tale of Republican simplicity; il. by Frank T. Merrill. N. Y., Appleton, 1900. c. 12+284 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A series of romantic episodes taken from the earlier years of Jefferson's life in Virginia. Mr. Butterworth follows Jefferson to the White House.

Butterworth, Hezekiah. Jack's carrier pigeons: a tale of the times of Father Taylor's Mariner's home. Bost., A. I. Bradley & Co., [1900.] c. 2-289 p. il. D. cl., $1.25.

The purpose is to show how to form a kindergarten Sunday-school. The scene is the old North Square, Boston, in the days of Father E: F. Taylor and the work of the Port Society. Father Taylor was the children's friend, and a natural story-teller. The book is partly fact and partly fiction. The Mariner's Home was the resort of many old sailors, and it is these sailors, and other frequenters of the house, who contribute a collection of interesting stories. Father Taylor's pigeons are used to teach kindness to birds and animals. "Jack" stands for all sailormen.

Butterworth, Hezekiah. Traveller tales of South Africa; or, stories which picture recent history. Bost., Dana Estes & Co., [1900.] 328 p. il. D. (Educational travel ser.) cl., $1.50.

The author's purpose is somewhat similar to his "Zig Zag" books; he presents by a connected narrative, with interpolated stories and many illustrations, a picture of the present political condition of South Africa, and "the manner in which this part of the austral world has become so active and important a factor in the progress of mankind." The first volume of a new series.

Carpenter, Frank G. South America, social, industrial, and political: a twenty-five-thousand-mile journey in search of information in the Isthmus of Panama and the lands of the equator. Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, Chile, Tierra del Fuego, the Falklands, Argentina, Paraguay, Uruguay, Brazil, the Guianas, Venezuela, and the Orinoco Basin. Akron, O., Saalfield Publising Co., 1900. c. 3-625 p. il. Q. cl., $3; hf. mor., $4; mor., $5.

The outcome of a journalistic expedition to South America in search of information for the American business man and the general reader. The work is more a study of the commercial and social life of the cities, and a description of how the people live and work in the country, than a diary of travel and adventure. It describes the chief industries, notes the characteristic features of the inhabitants, discusses the resources and possibilities of the various countries, and incidentally points out the chances for the investment of American capital and the increase of American trade.

Thomas Chalmers was born March 17, 1780, and died May 30, 1847. He was a teacher of mathematics and a popular preacher; his great interest in economic and political problems was evinced in the unabridged original of his work published in 1826. The text of the work is carefully reproduced, repetitions being omitted and often illustrations, to bring it into smaller compass. Material is presented in the introduction intended to criticise obsolete doctrines of the author and as an appreciation of those teachings which have contemporary interest.

Chambers, Rev. Arthur. Man and the spiritual world as disclosed by the Bible. Phil., G: W. Jacobs & Co., [1900.] c. 289 p. D. cl., $1.25.

What is man, and what is his destiny after death, with some characteristics of the spiritual world is the subject; the author draws his answers from the Bible. Intended to be a companion book to "Our life after death," from his pen.

Chambers, G: F. Story of eclipses, simply told for general readers; with especial reference to the total eclipse of the sun of May 28, 1900. N. Y., Appleton, 1900. c. 222 p. il. S. (Library of useful stories.) cl., 40 c.

Intended as a sequel to the author's two former volumes, "Story of the solar system" and the "Story of the stars." Aims to present in readable, yet sound scientific language, a popular account of eclipses of the sun and moon, and (very briefly) of certain kindred astronomical phenomena which depend upon causes in some degree similar to those which operate in connection with eclipses.

Chambers, Rob. W: The cambric mask: a romance. N. Y., F. A. Stokes Co., [1900.] c. '99. 6+328 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The unexpected rise in value of a neglected piece of land, through a proposed extension of a railroad line, gives the motive for the story. It is coveted by an unscrupulous quartette of men, who call in a party of White Caps to aid them in their schemes. A love story lightens the somewhat sombre narrative.

Chambers, Rob. W: The conspirators: a romance N. Y., Harper, 1900. c. '99. 5+266 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

The scenes are laid in the Duchy of Luxembourg.

*Chavannes, Albert. Lizzie Melton, a self-reliant girl. Knoxville, Tenn., Albert Chavannes, 1900. 5+161 p. por. S. (New thought lib., no. 12.) pap., 25 c.

Prof. Platt, an important character in this novel, was a real personage. Many of the scenes and incidents are likewise real. The author's purpose in writing a story which he refers to as a radical novel has been to attack the present double standard of morals for men and women. The history of Lizzie Melton is a pathetic one.

Clark, Felicia Buttz. The cripple of Nuremberg. Cin., O., Jennings & Pye, 1900. c. 3-290 p. il. O. cl., $1.25.

A story of Germany in the sixteenth century, when the cause of the Reformation had gained secure ground. Father and son, and mother and son are shown arrayed against each as Protestants and Catholics. Charles tries in vain to stamp out the Protestant faith in Germany, and re-establish the Roman Catholic religion.

Clark, Imogen. The heresy of Parson Medlicott. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., 1900. c. 3-26 p. D. (What is worth while ser.) leatherette, 35 c.

A plea for tolerance in the form of a story. Parson Medlicott broadens mentally as he grows old, and condones many innocent acts he had previously condemned. Some of his parishioners find fault with him and criticise him, but the old man is unmindful of the rancor, and he pursues the even tenor of his way with the trusting heart of a child.

Clark, J: Scott. A study of English and American poets: a laboratory method. N. Y., Scribner, 1900. c. 14+859 p. O. cl., $2.

A complementary volume to the author's "Study of English prose writers," published in 1898. The method here offered consists in determining the particular and distinctive features of a writer's style (using the term style in its widest sense), in sustaining this analysis by a very wide consensus of critical opinion, in illustrating the particular characteristics of each writer by carefully selected extracts from his works, and in then requiring the pupil to find, in the works of the writer, parallel illustrations. Biographical outlines precede each author discussed and a bibliography.

Clarke, J: Caldwell Calhoun, D.D. Man and his divine father. Chic., A. C. McClurg & Co., 1900. c. 2-364 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A treatment of systematic divinity from the point of view of the conservative theologian; the author in reaching his conclusions takes into account the most recent results of scientific inquiry. The discussion includes the philosophy of mind and spirit, moral science, the rights of men and human hopes. The author presents man and God as we know them by psychology and revelation, and considers their relation to each other as shown by the Bible. The chapters on "Philo of Alexandria" and "The Church in Syria," will be found valuable, as shedding light on New Testament thought and times.

Dr. Twiddel, an impecunious physician, is introduced in a small room overlooking an uninteresting London street. He has just been approached, by the friends of a supposed lunatic, who offer a large compensation if he will consent to accompany the prospective patient on a Continental tour. While deliberating whether he will accept or refuse the offer, Dr. Twiddel is approached by an unprincipled friend who conceives a plot to provide for the patient and benefit himself. The plot is executed, and the result is some humorous situations in which the "sane lunatic" and a lady of rank figure.

Cobb, T: The dissemblers. N. Y., J: Lane, 1901 [1900. c.] 2-313 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The "dissemblers" are a literary man and an English girl, fresh from school on the Continent, who pretend to be engaged, in order to save the reputation of the girl, who has most innocently been involved in compromising circumstances. From being thrown so much together, their feelings for each other undergo a change from utter indifference to love. There are a couple of other lovers in the story, an attractive grass widow, and an irascible father. The scene is London, among the fashionable set.

Cobb, T: The judgment of Helen: [a novel.] N. Y., J: Lane, 1899. 2+320 p. D. cl., $1.50.

An attractive widow of means and good social position succeeds in persuading her pretty young daughter Helen to engage herself to a wealthy, self-made man much her senior, to whom she is indifferent. The widow has rented a handsome house for the autumn at the seaside, and here the half dozen characters are gathered together. Besides the affianced lovers there are a clever, scheming niece of the widow, who admires her cousin's intended, a poor young surgeon in love with Helen ,and a rich baronet in love with the widow. A clever intriguing comedy is played with a satisfactory ending all around. By the author of "Mr. Passingham."

Cobb, T: Scruples: a novel. N. Y., J: Lane, 1900. 2+244 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A young woman with a troublesome conscience, worries not only herself, but her family, with her "scruples," whenever called upon to make any important decisions in her life. She is never quite sure what she wants, or what is right for her to do. In the present case it is the question which man shall she marry. There are three love stories, all ending happily. The scene is in London, in the "smart" set.

This novel, the work of a Jesuit priest, has had a great success in Spain. It treats of the corruption of Madrid society and its follies, with a sharp and caustic pen, directed with keen insight into the forces which mould social life. The author's satire is also pointed against a corrupt government.

Conrad, Jos. Lord Jim: a romance. N. Y. Doubleday & McClure Co., 1900. c. '99. 1900. 3+392 p. D. cl., $1.50.
Tells the story of a young seaman who has always dreamed of the day when a great emergency might arise and he shall meet it face to face: suddenly this crucial moment does come; and its effects upon him is portrayed in a most unusual and striking fashion. It is an intensely human story of most profound psychological insight—with a tragedy of daily life standing out grimly against the romance of the sea and the unknown Malaysian islands.

This narrative of the Belgian Expedition of 1898-1899, with the story of its hardy pioneer explorers, is the first chapter of human experience through the sunless winter and long night of the under surface of the globe. The author tells of a tribe of Fuegian giants; of the life and habits of a curious otherworld race of animals; of the helpless drift of the brig Belgica over many hundred miles of a mysterious sea while frozen in the ice; of the discovery of a new navigable highway, and of the exploration of 500 miles of coast in a new land of ice and snow. Over a hundred pictures in color and black and white add to the interest.

Corelli, Marie. Boy: a sketch. Phil., Lippincott, 1900. c. 5-348 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

"Boy" was the son of the Hon. D'Arcy-Muir, a man of good English family, who spent his days in an intoxicated condition, and of a lazy, slovenly mother with no thoughts but of food. A lovely woman wished to adopt "Boy" but his mother objected, sent him to a French school and there let him become a soldier. The events of his ruined life finally bring him into the war in South Africa.

Corelli, Marie. The master-Christian. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1900. c. 604 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The author explains through the conversations of priests, monks, artists, doctors, free-thinkers, humanitarians, atheists, and thinkers of every class that the reason for the apparent dying out of religion and the growth of materialism and selfishness must be sought in the attitude of the church, Catholic and Protestant, toward Christianity as first taught by Christ. As a system the church is losing its hold upon the people, but the teachings of Christ may still be looked to give hope and courage. The scene shifts between Rouen, Rome, and London.

Corelli, Marie. Patriotism; or, self advertisement? A social note on the present war. Phil., Lippincott, 1900. 3-63 p. D. pap., 25 c.

Chiefly a criticism of Kipling's "Absent-minded beggar," which the writer claims lowers the English soldier, in the eyes of other nations; also pointed at the actresses and society women who have recited these verses, who were impelled she thinks like Mr. Kipling more by a desire to advertise themselves, than by patriotism.

Raymund was born at Capua towards the year 1330, of the illustrious family Delle Vigne. This is the story of his life. He was, says the Master General of the Friars Preachers—Andrew Fruhwirth—"in the first place a faithful example to his brethren in the Dominican family, next, Confessor to the seraphic Catherine of Siena, then the twenty-third Master General and a great reformer of his order, and finally a devoted servant and courageous defender of the legitimate Pope and of the rights of the Holy See."

An occult story, which centres around an old arm chair, bought by one of the characters; the spirit of the first owner, who belonged to a past generation, constantly occupies it, telling of his life in the world and in the spirit land, of which he is an inhabitant. When he leaves the chair a white flame is seen—the spirit of mercy symbolizing his mission to the family who owns the chair.

Cornford, L. Cope. Robert Louis Stevenson. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1900. c. 7+201 p. D. cl., $1.25.

An essay toward a just appreciation of Stevenson's personality and temperament as shown in his finished achievement. Sidney Colvin is writing the authorized biography and the author gives nothing new in biographical details. He treats of Stevenson's heritage, his ancestry, gives an outline of his life, and then analyzes Stevenson's work as moralist, artist, novelist, limner of landscape and romanticist. The chapter on Stevenson's style is a distinct addition to Stevenson literature.

The scenes, which are laid at Ephesus, are parallel with the nineteenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. The author has endeavored to make the story true to the times, and there is hardly an illusion to a custom or circumstance for which there does not exist classical authority. Onesimus, the hero of the tale, will be recognized as the slave of Philemon, the Christian householder whose hospitality provided a meeting-place for the church at Colosse. The slave had stolen from his master and escaped to Rome. There Paul found him and he was converted.

In the preface to "Plant relations" the author gave his reasons for suggesting that the ecological stand point is best adapted for the first contact with plants. Recognizing the fact, however, that many teachers will prefer to begin with the morphological standpoint, he has herewith made an independent volume, which may precede or follow the other, or may provide a brief course of botanical study in itself. Although morphology is the dominant subject, physiology, ecology, and taxonomy are included in a general way.

N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1900. c. 13+298 p. O. cl., $2.

The Baroness Cecile de Courtot was an eye witness of the French Revolution. She was a prisoner in the Temple with Marie Antoinette, condemned to the guillotine, but rescued on her way there by her lover. She writes minutely of all the events of the Reign of Terror, and the causes leading to it, especially the scandal of the queen's necklace. She lived in Paris in Napoleon's time, of whom she has much to tell, as well as of the Empress Josephine and other famous personages of the period.

Press,] [1900.] c. '99. 2+310 p. il. D. cl., $1.25.

In 1877 a young Englishman visited southern Illinois to exchange coal-fields and railroads for English gold. He met two physicians, both characters. They had been called to attend a man they decided to be "Dirk Peters," a character in Edgar Allan Poe's unfinished story of "The Narrative of A. Gordon Pym." On his sick-bed this old sailor tells his experiences since Poe left him in 1827, giving marvellous accounts of Antarctic regions. Interspersed in this ingenious tale are comments by the doctors on all the mental, moral, social, and religious questions of their day and much literary criticism.

Davidson, T: A history of education. N. Y., Scribner, 1900. c. 7+292 p. D. cl., net, $1.

"To be strictly accurate," says the author in his preface, "the title of this book should have been 'A brief history of education, as conscious evolution.' To record, even summarily, the facts and events in the long history of education within the narrow limits of a text-book, would have been both impossible and undesirable. My endeavor has been to present education as the last and highest form of evolution—that great process which includes both nature and culture. I have tried to show what it is that evolves, why it evolves, and why evolution, finally attaining to consciousness, becomes education. Seeing that the imminent purpose of evolution is the realization of free individuals, that is, moral personalities, I have endeavored to mark the steps by which this has been gradually attained, and to indicate those that have yet to be taken."

We are introduced to the heroine, Noel Lepeyre, an orphan girl of Louisiana, as she journeys to New Orleans to take up her residence with her father's sister. On reaching her destination, a big picturesque house in the French quarter, she finds that her aunt is ill with yellow fever, that the house is quarantined, and that she herself will not be allowed to leave it. She spends seven lonely days in the house and garden, mostly in the latter. She has a next door neighbor, young like herself, who penetrates her solitude, a pretty love story being the result.

"If it is asked," the author says in his preface, "why such a book as this is desirable after those noble fictions, 'Darkness and dawn,' and 'Quo vadis,' the reply must be that these books necessarily take and interpret the Christian point of view. And they do well; but the Pagan point of view still needs its interpretation, at least as a help to an easy apprehension of the life and literature of the great age of the fall of the Roman Republic. This is the aim of 'A friend of Cæsar.'"

Author is member of the U. S. Catholic Historical Society. While searching the Vatican secret archives for facts in the history of Alexander VI. he chanced upon records leading him to conclude that there must have been missionary settlers in America long before Columbus. This clue he has followed with persistency. The trend of his work is religious but he has been just to the social, civil and political interests of the aborigines and of the European emigrants. Archives and manuscripts consulted (2 p.); printed literature consulted (23 p.); authors quoted (10 p.); elaborate chapter headings take place of index.

Douglas, Amanda Minnie. Almost as good as a boy; il. by Bertha G. Davidson. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1900. c. 6+375 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Miss Douglas tells the responsibility falling upon a young girl, in whose case it might at first have seemed that she would have better have been a boy in order to give the necessary assistance to her family; how the girl accomplishes her various undertakings in a most successful way, and proves that her success is at least equal to what might be reasonably expected of a boy, under similar circumstances. A story for a girl of fifteen.

Douglas, Amanda Minnie. A little girl in old Washington. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1900. c. 4+319 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The "little girl" of this story is Annis Bouvier, whose mother makes a second marriage when Annis is about six years old. Annis gets a new father in Squire Mason, whom she learns to love, and the Mason children receive their new mother with flattering enthusiasm. The doings of the young people, who fall in love and marry as they grow up, and go to Washington and attend balls at the White House, are interestingly related. The story opens in Virginia just before the war of 1812.

Dreiser, Theodore. Sister Carrie. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1900. c. 5+557 p. D. cl., $1.50

"Sister Carrie," a girl of eighteen, came to Chicago in the early 80's to look for work. She has longings for amusement and good clothes and allows a handsome "drummer" to take care of her. Later she thinks herself married to the manager of a large drinking place. He takes her to New York, where she finally goes on the Casino stage. Her career is quiet and she never seems to realize her position. The author's theories of the longings in Carrie's nature that led her to despise work and need comfortable surroundings are unconventional. The temptations of working girls are described with utmost candor.

Dresser, Horatio Willis. Education and the philosophical ideal. N. Y., Putnam, 1900. c. 5+255 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The main thesis "The new point of view," is that life itself is educational, that the individual possesses instincts which, if freely followed, lead the way to fullest self-expression and the service of humanity. The other essays are entitled: Educational ideals; Equanimity; The subconscious mind; The spiritual ideal in childhood; An experiment in education; The expression of the spirit; An ideal summer conference; The mystery of pain and evil; The philosophical ideal; The criteria of truth; Organic perfection; Immortality.

Dresser, Horatio Willis. Living by the spirit. N. Y., Putnam, 1900. c. 6+102 p. nar. S. bds., 75 c.

"The purpose of this little book is to simplify the problem of life. Its aim is also to increase the reader's knowledge of self, to add to his powers of helpfulness, that through this added understanding of life and this greater power of service he may be the more ready to manifest the fulness and beauty of the spirit." The book is not a compilation of the author's larger volumes; it is a fresh statement written to meet a constant demand for a simple treatise.

Driscoll, Rev. J: T. Christian philosophy: God; a contribution to a philosophy of theism. N. Y., Benziger Bros., 1900. c. 16+342 p. D. cl., net, $1.25.

"The line of thought worked out in this volume is a departure from that followed in many treatises on the subject. The writer takes the idea of God as a fact of consciousness. The question is not how the idea came to the individual mind, but are we justified in holding the idea, and what is its content? Hence an investigation into the grounds of the idea. Viewed in this aspect, it becomes a study of psychology. Now, as the idea of God is not an individual but a universal fact, the course of investigation is of more than a personal value. It is a study of the human mind."—Preface.

Drummond, Hamilton. A man of his age; il. by J. Ambrose Walton. N. Y., Harper, 1900. c. '99. 5+303 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The scenes of this story are laid just prior to the St. Bartholomew Massacre in France. The hero of the title passes through many hair-breadth adventures, in which his sword plays a prominent part. The story is carefully treated from an historical side. Catherine de Medici, Jeanne and Henry of Navarre are some of the prominent characters.

About fifty stories, related by animals of the great African forest. The author believes from observation and study that animals, birds, reptiles, ants, spiders, etc., possess great powers of apprehension and prevision; that creatures of the same species have understanding with one another, either by voice, sign, or other way unknown to man; otherwise, he says, they could not act with such harmony and deliberation. His theories are illustrated by the stories, the animals telling their own stories and explaining their own actions as if endowed with the power of speech.

Dudeney, Mrs. H: Folly Corner. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1900. c. 8+332 p. D. cl., $1.25.
Folly Corner was a picturesque old homestead in an English market town. Within its walls and gardens the story has its scene, excepting for a brief shifting to London. Jethro Jayne, the bachelor owner of Folly Corner, advertises, in a joke, for a wife, and finds as he supposes a cousin—a handsome young woman who comes to Folly Corner on a visit. She is a young woman evidently with a past. Her pathetic experience and the study of her character make a book of the same morbid type as "The maternity of Harriott Wicken."

A romantic young girl, the descendant of a "family of readers," tells the story of her dreamy, uneventful life. She is the offspring of a long line of English ancestry, and the English and American ideals of the first half of the century are well contrasted. She meets her fate in Washington on the day of Gen. Grant's second inauguration.

The struggle between Great Britain and the United States for the possession of the vast and valuable territory of which Oregon forms a part, and the part played by McLoughlin, of the Hudson's Bay Company, are here set forth. The men and the women whose names are prominently associated with the pioneer movement are presented in life-like portraiture, and the conditions prevailing under the old regime—the semi-feudal government of the Hudson's Bay Company at Fort Vancouver—form a curious and fascinating portion of the story. The author also gives an account of the picturesque life in the mountains—the trappers, the Indians, and the missionaries, etc.

Ebers, Georg Moritz. In the desert. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1900. c. 2+329 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The heroine is a young German woman, of independent fortune left an orphan at an early age. She is clever and pretty, highly educated, and self-willed. Determining to "live out her nature," she breaks away from civilization and lives in a tent in the Arabian desert, with a companion and a maid. Here she is sought for by young Prof. Hartwang to whom she had once been betrothed. She refuses to return with him to their old home, frankly acknowledging her love for a Bedouin who has been her guide. While the story has a humorous ending, it also teaches that the greatest happiness is found in self-sacrifice.

Edwards, W: H. Shaksper not Shakespeare. Cin., O., Rob. Clarke Co., 1900. c. 11+507 p. pors. facsimiles, D. cl., $2.

A denial of the claims set up for William Shaksper, of Stratford, as the writer of the Shakespeare plays or any one of them. The work is elaborate and the outcome of many years careful study. It is denied that "this man Shaksper" was ever testified to by any of his contemporaries, in his life time, in any literary work whatever. Mr. Edwards holds that the Shakespeare plays were the work of a band or coterie of play-wrights under a common sobriquet, whether assumed by themselves or given them by others. The plays embraced many besides those published in the Folio of 1623. It is also shown by the plays themselves that they could not have originated in any such environment as Stratford-on-Avon, or from a man so circumstanced as was "William Shaksper."

The period is the beginning of the Christian era, and the scenes are laid in Rome, the island of Capri and other parts of Italy. The Emperor, Tiberius, had retired to Capri, and from his mysterious seclusion sent forth decrees which kept the Imperial City in a continual state of terror. A single word uttered in disrespect of the Emperor or his favorite, Sejanus, might mean death and confiscation of property. The story is one of love and adventure, in which types of the diverse nationalities that then thronged the Imperial City are revealed in characters of marked individuality.

This work has been accepted as the standard on the subject of which it treats for thirty years. It deals with typology not only as a Bible and theological subject simply, but in its connection with all Christian doctrine, and all the dispensations of religion from the Adamic to the Christian. This last and final edition has been prepared in the light of the latest investigations and developments of the Bible, its land and its history. Without changing any fundamental principle, the work is very much enlarged and has many important changes.

Farnham, C: Haight. Life of Francis Parkman. Bost., Little, Brown & Co., 1900. c. 14+394 p. pors. O. cl., $2.50.

The author knew Mr. Parkman, and his work has been done with the sanction of the historian's nearest relatives, and with their assistance as far as information of a personal character is concerned. He has had access to all the available material in the hands of Mr. Parkman's family and friends, including such letters as have been preserved, the diary of his vacation journals, and the extremely interesting autobiographic letters written by the historian to his friends, Dr. George H. Ellis and Martin Brimmer. Instead of following the chronological method in his work, Mr. Farnham has, as he states in his preface, tried to simplify the reader's labor and gain vividness of portraiture by confining chronology chiefly to one chapter, thenceforth viewing facts and experiences as bearing mainly on achievement and development. The book thus divides itself into three parts: (1) Parkman's preparation, (2) the reflection of his personality in his works, and (3) the story of his moral growth.

The aim is to show, says the author, that Americanism is a religion, that the social structure in this country is based upon the axioms of a faith which is the quintessence of historical Christianity, that the historic Church—having served as a mighty causeway between the old-world regime and the new—here merges its structure into an identity with the structure of the secular order, that Americanism is in its nature revolutionary and that American principles, social and political, are sharply antithetical to European principles.

Fink, Karl. A brief history of mathematics: an authorized tr. of Dr. Karl Fink's "Geschichte der elementar—mathematik," by Wooster Woodruff Beman and David Eugene Smith. Chic., Open Court Pub. Co., 1900. c. tr. 2+333 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Although the work is virtually an historical survey of the elements of mathematices, the original title "Geschichte de elementar mathematik," is believed to be misleading to English readers, because the work goes beyond the elementary stages of the subject, hence the change of the title to the present form. The author traces the origin of mathematical science to the early Egyptian and Babylonian civili-

The adventures of Leslie Murray, a young Bostonian who goes to Youngville, Kentucky, when about eighteen to graduate from his father's alma mater —the Clare University. He has many thrilling adventures, as he prefers athletics to his books. There is a description of a foot-ball game, of which he is the hero; then comes his initiation into the Phi Delta college society, his meeting with the moonshiners and his flirtation with a moonshiner's daughter. He is forced to leave college, being accused of a murder, falls in with two tramps, organizes a theatre company, etc.

Flaubert, Gustave. Salammbô: the maid of Carthage; re-told from the French of Gustave Flaubert by Zenaide A. Ragozin. N. Y., Putnam, 1900. O. (Tales of the heroic ages.) cl., $1.50.

In retelling this masterpiece, Madame Ragozin has not deviated far from the original. Much unsuited to young readers has been cut, but the picturesque highly colored descriptions remain. Salammbô was the sister of the great Carthaginian General Hannibal, her story being true to history.

Fleming, Mrs. May Agnes. Guy Earlscourt's wife: a novel. N. Y., G: W. Dillingham Co., [1900.] c. 484 p. 12°, (Madison sq. lib., no. 2.) cl., $1; pap., 25 c.

Fletcher, Alice Cunningham. Indian story and song, from North America. Bost., Small, Maynard & Co., 1900. c. 13+126 p. D. cl., $1.50.

This volume was suggested by the singing of a number of Omaha Indians of their native melodies at the Congress of Musicians held at the Trans-Mississippi Exposition at Omaha in July, 1898. Not only was the scientific value of these aboriginal songs in the study of the development of music demonstrated, but their availability as themes for the American composer was recognized. In response to the expressed desire of many musicians, the writer has given a number of songs in their setting of story.

Fletcher, Ella Adelia. The woman beautiful: a practical treatise on the development and preservation of woman's health and beauty, and the principles of taste in dress. N. Y., W. M. Young & Co., [1899.] c. 29+535 p. il. O. cl., $2.50.

An account of experiments with the "Geneva medium," Helen Smith. In her trances she lives the existence of an Indian princess, an inhabitant of the planet Mars, and as Marie Antoinette. Professor Flournoy and his fellow-scientists have for more than five years experimented with these remarkable psychical phenomena, this being an authentic account of their experiences.

Flowerdew, Herbert. The realist: a modern romance. N. Y., J: Lane, 1900. 2-345 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The reporter of an almost defunct London literary paper is sent to interview a writer of French realistic novels about whom ghastly stories were told. The paper failed before he could print his interview. The novelist offers him a position. The experiences which come to him during his sojourn in the house where the realist studies all his scenes from life make an exciting story in which a beautiful girl "typist" and a Hindoo servant play leading roles.

Flynt, Josiah, [pseud. for Josiah Flynt Willard.] Notes of an itinerant policeman. Bost., L. C. Page & Co., 1900. c. 5+252 p. por. D. cl., $1.25.

The author of "Tramping with tramps" has experience as a police officer and comes in contact with tramps and criminals. Discusses: Who constitute our criminal classes? the professional criminal, picking pockets, how towns are protected, police work as a new career for young men, the tramp's politics, protecting towns and railroads. Author thinks police protect criminals. Much has appeared in The Independent, Harper's Weekly, the Critic, Munsey's Magazine, etc., but all is now revised.

Flynt, Josiah, [pseud. for Josiah Flynt Willard,] and Walton, Francis. The powers that prey. N. Y., McClure, Phillips & Co., 1900. c. 10+260 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The authors have spent most of their lives in studying sociological problems, and phases of tramp and criminal life. Mr. Flynt says "the book is the result of ten years' wandering with tramps and two years spent with police organizations." The episodes described are not only realistic stories, but they are also contributions to sociology. The titles are: In the matter of his nibs; A bill from Tiffany's; The revenge of the four; The order of the penitents; The prison demon; The great idea; Found guilty; On sentence day; Peggie Niven; A dead one.

The doctrines of Jefferson are scattered through many costly volumes that are to be found only in private libraries or in centres where there are large public libraries. It is the purpose of this volume to put the teachings of Jefferson within the reach of all. His voluminous correspondence and numerous state papers have been examined and wherever a significant passage or an important official document has been found, it has been classified and placed in this collection. The aim of the biographical sketch has been "to avoid controversy, abuse and eulogy, and to state the facts in a fair, non-partisan manner."

Fowler, Ellen Thorneycroft. Cupid's garden. N. Y., Appleton, 1900. 13+296 p. 1 il. D. cl., $1.50.

Short stories by the author of "Concerning Isabel Carnaby." Contents: An old wife's tale; Scattered leaves; The hand of Priscilla Hawthorne; Miss Belinda's love-letters; A lost pleiad; A little learning; The scales of injustice; The man that married Mary; A merry heart; The success of failure; A wrong altar; My matrimonial agency; Wanted, a wife; A poet at play.

Fowler, Ellen Thorneycroft. The Farringdons. N. Y., Appleton, 1900. c. 4+367 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The Farringdons had for several generations owned the great iron works and collieries in Mershire, the great coal district in the middle of England, generally known as the Black Country. They were Methodists, consequently the reader gets an insight in a friendly way to the "non-conformist conscience" which is quite amusing. There are character sketches also of Methodist men and women, apparently taken from life. Elisabeth Farringdon the dominant female character is young, pretty, witty, wilful, clever, and illogical, and altogether blind for many years to the sincere love of the most desirable man of her circle. Her life is full of surprises. A glimpse is again offered of "Isabel Carnaby" and a few other characters of former novels. Each chapter is headed by an original verse.

Fox, Frances Marg. Farmer Brown and the birds; il. by Etheldred B. Barry. Bost., L. C. Page & Co., 1900. c. 7-72 p. D. (Cosy corner ser.) cl., 50 c.

Because Farmer Brown kills a harmless little Jenny Wren, the birds bring his case before a judge and jury of birds to decide what shall be done with him. In the course of the trial the birds side is well set forth. It is shown that if it were not for their constant war upon insects, life on a farm would scarcely be endurable, nor would it be possible to grow fruit and other eatables in abundance. The King bird, the eagle, decides to banish the birds from the farmer's domain leaving him to the mercy of the bugs and insects.

Fox, J:, jr. Crittenden: a Kentucky story of love and war. N. Y., Scribner, 1900. c. 3+256 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Crittenden is the descendant of men who fought in the Revolution and on the northern and southern sides in the Civil War. He found himself out of touch with his surroundings and disappointed in the woman he loved when the call to arms came for the Spanish-American war. He enters the army as private. The descriptions of the battles at Santiago are realistic in the extreme. There is a fine tribute to the Rough Riders and their leader.

Fuller, H: Blake, ["Stanton Page," pseud.] The last refuge: a Sicilian romance. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1900. c. 4+284 p. D. cl., $1.50.

When approaching forty years the Freiherr of Kalteman began to feel himself too old and too young, too experienced and too inexperienced. He started upon travels to Italy where eighteen years ago his best thoughts and happiest hours had come to him. He found his power of enjoyment gone. He met a young enthusiast and decided to travel with him and see through his eyes. This setting enables the author of "The chevalier of Penseiri Vani" to give his readers thoughts on Italian scenery, art, religion, politics and beauty, and also to make a fine study of the human soul in every land. They meet people from all countries all journeying with tired souls to a "City of Refuge" in Sicily. This city typifies duty.

"The present work cannot fairly be called destructive; nor is it primarily constructive, but rather critical. It may perhaps most appropriately be compared to the operations which precede construction, to the investigation of the ground and the digging of trenches with a view to foundations. It is of the nature of Prolegomena. Hence it is written for students, and I have not tried to make its style attractive; I have aimed only at clearness and precision."—Preface.

Garland, Hamlin. The eagle's heart. N. Y., Appleton, 1900. c. 4+369 p. D. cl., $1.50.
"The eagle" begins life in a western town; he is the son of a minister, and is afflicted with a violent temper. The book is a character study of a boy not wholly bad, who is finally redeemed from evil ways by a woman. Harold Excell in his career commits crimes and is for a time the inmate of a jail. He spends the larger part of his life in Colorado as a cowboy.

Garland, Will A. Matthew Doyle. N. Y., G: W. Dillingham Co., 1900. c. 5-282 p. D. cl., $1.25.
The scene of the story is laid in a small Southern town. The hero, "Mat Doyle," is a fine fellow, the support of his mother and sister and the best friend to his chum "Dud." The two men both love the same woman, and both run for sheriff, one in favor of, one against lynching. Mat was elected, and he opposed lynching. How his principle was tested when the woman he loved was assaulted by a negro, is full of interest. The author is the son of ex-Attorney-General Garland.

Garner, R. L. Apes and monkeys, their life and language; introd. by E: Everett Hale. Bost., Ginn, 1900. c. 13+297 p. il. por. D. cl., $2.
"This volume is the natural product of many years devoted by the author to studying the speech and habits of monkeys. That naturally led him up to the study of the great apes. The matter is chiefly a record of the tabulated facts gleaned from his special field of research. The aim in view is to convey to the casual reader a more correct idea than now prevails concerning the physical, mental and social habits of apes and monkeys and to prepare him for a wider appreciation of animals in general."—Preface.

First published by the author, who is a well-known writer on scientific subjects and natural history. It is a collection of strange and curious facts from the life of animals and plants, which seems to bear out Mr. Gentry's claim for them of a much higher order of intelligence than is generally allotted them. In addition to the description by the author of remarkable worms, crabs, insects, plants and so on, the book now contains eight full-page pictures photographed from life by A. R. Dugmore.

George, H:, jr. Life of Henry George. N. Y., Doubleday & McClure Co., [for sale by Doubleday, Page & Co.,] 1900. c. 14+634 p. pors. O. cl., $1.50.

Seldom has a biographer enjoyed such unusual advantages as has Mr. George in writing the life of the author of "Progress and poverty." His father's journals and unpublished autobiographic writings were extremely full; and he himself has intimately associated with his work during all the years when the elder George was the most striking figure in our national politics and political economy. He tells simply, yet graphically, the remarkable story of Henry George's life: his boyhood and life at sea, during which his character began to take shape; his fierce struggle with poverty in the California days, when he realized to the utmost the condition of those unfortunate multitudes whose spokesman he was to be; the writing and publication of the book with which he first electrified the country; and then the full life of authorship, lecturing, and politics which taxed his great energies to the utmost till his sudden death during the mayoralty campaign in 1897.

The "Putnam lib. of standard literature" comprises reprints of standard works, which are in large part masterpieces of literature. It will also, however, include certain works which have never been reprinted, or which have not been in print for a considerable period, together with others which have been reprinted only in limited editions, and which have, therefore, not heretofore been available for the use of students of to-day. The series will thus consist in part of rare books of special value for the scholar, and in part of more familiar works appealing to the wider circle of intelligent readers. The volumes will be characterized by an accurate text, and will include scholarly introductions and notes in a form convenient for reference. The notes are placed at the foot of the page and will present such material as is necessary to make the text intelligible to modern readers, and to bring the books up to the standard of modern scholarship.

Gibbons, W: Cephus. The heart of Job; a message to the world. Chic., Universal Truth Pub. Co., 1900. c. 3-167 p. por. D. cl., $1.

The author looks upon the book of Job as an allegory—a contest of the spirits of good and evil. His book is a spiritual interpretation of Job, which he hopes in performing its mission, "will liberate mankind from the bondage in the belief in evil."

Gigot, Rev. Francis Ernest C: General introduction to the study of the Holy Scriptures. In 3 v., v. 1. N. Y., Benziger Bros., 1900. 2-606 p. O. cl., net, $2.
This work is the outcome of lectures delivered during several years in St. John's Ecclesiastical Seminary, Boston, and is chiefly intended as a text-book for similar institutions. As such it deals with the questions which it most behooves theological students to be acquainted with before they enter on the scientific interpretation of the sacred text, questions which fall under the three general heads of the Canon, Text, and Versions, and Hermeneutics of the Holy Scriptures. A concise treatment of the history, proofs, nature, and extent of the inspiration of the Bible, will be found in an appendix.

Gilchrist, R. Murray. The courtesy dame: a novel. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1900. c. 4+262 p. D. cl., $1.50.
Many of the secrets of aristocratic English life are uncovered in this clever but unconventional story. The courtesy dame was rescued from a barmaid's low surroundings, educated, and made the companion of an aristocratic cynic dying of inherited disease. The hero's fate was linked with this aristocrat through his unfortunate mother. It is proved that in the most selfish materialistic nature there is a redeeming quality.

Gilder, Jeannette Leonard. The autobiography of a tomboy; pictures by Florence Scovel Shinn. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1900. c. 4+349 p. D. buckram, $1.25.
The story of a bright, high spirited adventurous girl, from the time she is a small "mite" of four, until the end of her school days. It is told in the first person, and is probably a personal leaf out of the life of one of the editors of The Critic.

A musical novel, by the author of "Poor human nature." A story of temperaments illustrated in the marriage of the first violin of a celebrated orchestra of an English watering place to a young and pretty singer full of bohemian longings and no love of domesticity. With their unhappy matrimonial experiences are interwoven intelligent discussions of music and scenes from professional life.

Godwin, Parke. A new study of the sonnets of Shakespeare. N. Y., Putnam, 1900. c. 5+306 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The author desires to direct attention to two things: first, the method of investigation, which consists in interpretating the sonnets from their own words almost exclusively, and without recurring to any supposed extraneous incidents in the life of the great poet, of which we know absolutely nothing; and, second, to the main result of the application of that method—a division of the sonnets, in which nearly one-half of them are found to relate to the passional experiences of the poet under the different influences of a true and a false affection, while the other half (or a little more than half) are found to relate to his poetic development—his aspirations, aims, struggles, disappointments, and final successes. A brief history is given, introductory, of the sonnets, and a chapter of former expositions of the sonnets. The original sonnets newly arranged complete the volume.

Goodnow, Frank Johnson. Politics and administration: a study in government. N. Y., Macmillan, 1900. c. 13+270 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The purpose is to show, particularly from a consideration of political conditions as they now exist in the United States, that the formal governmental system as set forth in the law is not always the same as the actual system. The attempt is also made to indicate what changes in the formal system of the United States must be made, in order to make the actual system conform, more closely than it does at present, to the political ideas upon which the formal system is based.

Gordy, J. P. History of political parties in the United States. 2d ed. rev. In 4 v. v. 1. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1900. c. 3-598 p. D. cl., net, $1.75.

In presenting this edition of the history, the author desires to state that since the first publication of the work his further studies have led him to the conclusion that the political philosophy of Alexander Hamilton was held by a small minority of the Federalists who determined the policy of the country up to the election of John Adams; that this philosophy, or rather the measures growing out of it, led to the overthrow of the party in 1800; and that there was little difference between the opinions of the majority of the Federalists at that time and those of the Republican leaders in 1815. Not only has the work been reconstructed in accordance with that conclusion, many of the chapters being recast and others entirely rewritten, but it has been extended to embrace four volumes instead of three as originally intended.

a farm to become "somebody" is the motive of a strong story presenting various phases of American town and city life, especially as seen in politics and woman's clubs. The story is divided into three parts—"The emancipation," "The struggle," "The success"—depicting with realism and satire the different steps by which Selma White achieves social success. Divorced from one husband, she quickly marries a second whose death in a short time is brought about by the struggle of living in New York City. This opens the door for a third husband, a member of the legislature, who becomes governor of his state, and finally U. S. Senator.

Gurnhill, Rev. Ja. The morals of suicide. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1900. 10+227 p. D. cl., $1.75.

The subject is approached from the standpoint of a Christian socialist. To him suicide, as a symptom "of the sin and misery which is seething beneath the surface of society in all its classes, is a subject which demands his reverent, earnest, and sympathetic attention." His work offers thoughts and suggestions which may help to abate some of those evils from which society is suffering.

Guthrie, T: Anstey, ["F. Anstey," pseud.] The brass bottle. N. Y., Appleton, 1900. 4+355 p. D. cl., $1.50.

All the trouble in the story comes from an antique brass bottle, bought by a young architect at a London sale. When it is uncorked it fills the room with smoke, out of which materializes a venerable eastern looking figure, who claims to have been imprisoned for a thousand years in the bottle. Out of gratitude at his release he swears to serve the young man in every way in his power. He proves however to be an obstinate old fellow, who gets the young man into no end of trouble with the girl he loves, and with her father, and in his business.

Two stories of Africa. In "Elissa" Mr. Haggard takes his readers to the Phœnician city, in South Central Africa, the mysterious ruins of which have been the subject of so much speculation and research in the recent past. How it happened that a trading town, protected by vast fortifications and adorned with many temples dedicated to the gods of the Sidonians, was built by civilized men in the heart of Africa, may not be accurately known, but there is ample room for speculation as to the life of the Ancient City, and in this romance the author has tried to picture incidents such as might have accompanied the first extinction of Zimbabwe.

Hammond, J: Hays. The Transvaal trouble: an address. N. Y., The Abbey Press, [1900.] c. 4-37 p. S. cl., 25 c.

Mr. Hammond claims to speak only as an American citizen and from an American standpoint. His sole desire is, he says, "to corect the erroneous impressions prevailing on the South African question." He sets forth the grievances of the Outlanders in ten chapters entitled: A brief history; Success of the Transvaal; Kruger's extortions; Jameson's fatuous raid; Jailed for high treason; Disgusting back-door negotiations; How the war came; The grievances of the Outlanders; Gag law; The nefarious liquor traffic.

Hannah, I. C. A brief history of Eastern Asia. [N. Y., Putnam, 1900.] 16+303 p. D. cl., $2.

The material for this history was collected while the author was master of the English school at Tien-Tsin. Omitting Persia, Mesopotamia, Arabia, Syria, and Asia Minor, because the history of these countries belongs to Europe and the Mediterranean, rather than Asia; Mr. Hannah begins with prehistoric times and traces the history of the Asiatic civilizations to present day populations. The arrangement is chronological. Contains index, chronological table, bibliography (3 p.).

Harper, W: Rainey, and Burgess, I. B. Elements of Latin. N. Y., Amer. Book Co., [1900.] c. 320 p. map, D. cl., $1.

The more important differences between this book and the authors' "Latin Primer," published in 1891, are as following: 1. Instead of beginning at once upon the text of Cæsar sixteen introductory lessons are given to carefully selected forms and rules. 2. When the text of Cæsar is taken up, it is so simplified that no large number of new forms or syntactical rules will meet the pupil in any one lesson. 3. The text is chosen especially for its simplicity and interest. 4. Greater attention has been given to the vocabulary. 5. The number of topics treated has been reduced, and every topic when introduced is treated with unusual fulness.

The transcontinental triangulation extends 2600 miles westward from Cape May on the Atlantic coast across thirteen states and territories to Point Arena (north of San Francisco) on the Pacific Coast. It serves a triple purpose. It unites the surveys of the two coasts and makes them one survey. To other surveys in the states traversed it stands in a relation similar to that of the supreme court to lower courts. Its results are of such a high degree of accuracy that it is a survey of last resort among surveys. The third, and purely scientific purpose for which this survey is to be used is in the determination, in connection with other similar surveys, of the figure and size of the earth. Some of the results of this survey are embraced in the notes.

This work was first published about forty-five years ago. In preparing this edition the editor has not felt himself at liberty to interfere with the text as left by the author, except in the correction of a few obvious misprints or doubtful forms of Spanish expressions. But the original notes having been mostly printed in the language—Spanish, Latin, French, or Italian—of the writer quoted, and being therefore useless to many readers, are now translated, unless Sir Arthur Helps has himself translated them in his narrative in which case only the authority is given in the footnote. All the notes by Sir Arthur Helps have been retained, and those by the present editor are enclosed within square brackets.

The book is designed to provide a year's work for the class-room, and only such matter has been introduced as is deemed appropriate for pupils of the high-school age and attainments. Laboratory work has been excluded, the authors preferring to devote a whole volume to this part of the study, which is published under the title of "Physical experiments" and is to be used concurrently with the present work. An interesting feature is the introduction of portraits and sketches of a few of the men who, by their researches, have contributed to our knowledge of physics.

Henty, G: Alfred. Out with Garibaldi: a story of the liberation of Italy; il. by W. Rainey. N. Y., Scribner, 1900. c. 5+346 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The invasion of the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies by Garibaldi with a force of but a thousand irregular troops is one of the most romantic episodes ever recorded in military history. This is the climax, the story reaches, the little-known history of the struggle for Italian freedom, being told in a thrilling way, with the picturesque figure of Garibaldi for the central character. Like all of Henty's books, there is a young hero, the son of an English father and an Italian mother, who joins Garibaldi's band and has many adventures.

The breaking out of the Boer war compelled Chris King to flee with his mother from Johannesburg to the sea coast. There were with them many Uitlanders, and all are represented as suffering much from the Boers. Chris King and twenty of his friends form an independent company of scouts, and are with General Yule at Glencoe, then in Ladysmith, then with Buller. Of course there are battles and adventures in plenty.

Herrick, Huldah. Ginsey Kreider. Bost., Pilgrim Press, [1900.] c. 2+452 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

A tale of the Kentucky mountaineers. Ginsey Kreider is introduced as a girl of fourteen; the way in which she was rescued from what threatened to be the ruin of her life, is a theme of great interest. The writer who has done mission work among the ignorant mountaineers, and who makes a plea in the story for further religious and educational instruction for them, has drawn many of her characters from life, and also sketched customs and habits in the mountains as they came under her observation.

The scene of the novel is laid chiefly in Chicago, at the time of the Pullman strike. The characters are a young hospital doctor and an unhappy wife with a husband who is a confirmed drunkard. The three meet in the casualty ward of a public hospital, where the husband has been carried with two bullets in his head, the result of a saloon row. The doctor operates upon the man who lives, but with an impaired mind. The fates of these three people are bound together, in a sad and tragical narrative.

A study of a new character type. The scene London. The "slave" is a fashionable society woman of good birth, who apparently is not far above the animals in ethics or refinement of feeling. She has one passion which influences her whole life—that is a love of gems. She is young and beautiful and is loved by a young man desirable in every way as a husband. But she sells herself to a middle-aged widower for a magnificent emerald. In some occult way she is a slave to this gem, and when after her husband's death it is stolen from her by a masked burglar, she marries the thief.

"St. Peter's church was the radiating point of the missionary work of the English among the Iroquois. It discharged a difficult duty at a critical epoch, and the opening chapters of its annals are quite as much concerned with the Indians as with the population of Albany. Thus the parish was a force in the political history of the times. In its records are found abundant traces of the current life both of the colonial and of the post-revolutionary period. These, however, are incidents in the story of a parish, which, in the early days stood for the larger faith and law of Christ and which, amid overshadowings and mishaps, maintained its life and struggled into power."—Introduction.

Hopkins, Archibald. The Apostle's creed; an analysis of its clauses; with reference to their credibility. N. Y., Putnam, 1900. c. 8+207 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A story of the Australian bush. The "boss" is an attractive young woman, the sole owner of Taroomba, a large sheep ranch. Life on this ranch, with a sheep-shearing and an attack upon its lonely home by tramps, in the absence of all the men, is full of local color. There is a love story in which the chief characters are a German piano-tuner, and an Englishman, the superintendent of the ranch—both suitors to the "boss."

Hough, Emerson. The girl at the Halfway house: a story of the plains. N. Y., Appleton, 1900. c. 4+371 p. D. cl., $1.50.
The time is just after the close of the Civil War. Edward Franklin, an ex-officer of the northern army, studying law in a small town in Illinois, is tempted through a letter from an old army friend to join him on the western frontier and take up government land. His friend is much his senior, an Irishman and a character. Their experience in the free life of the west, with its many opportunities and queer characters, offers a narrative of unusual freshness and picturesqueness. The writer evidently loves his subject, there being no sordid or unpleasant side to it. The heroine is an educated southern girl, who comes west with her family; through the reverses of war, her father becoming keeper of the "Half-way House."

Howard, Blanche Willis, [Mrs. von Teuffel.] The garden of Eden. N. Y., Scribner, 1900. c. 3+444 p. D. cl., $1.50.
The question of divorce finds much consideration in the present novel: whether it should be the means of breaking the bonds of a loveless marriage, or whether it is nobler to live out such a life together, once entered upon. The woman in the question is an American girl who loves a married man. At her mother's earnest wish she goes to Europe, in an endeavor to forget him. She studies and writes, living in Germany mostly, new complications coming into her life. There is a sad and fatalistic strain in the narrative.

The characters are taken from the peculiar and exclusive ecclesiastical society of a small English Cathedral town. Bishop Pendle, after being called from a social gathering to meet a stranger in his library seems disturbed, does several unusual things, and provokes the curiosity of his chaplain, a sneaky curate aiming at a living in the bishop's gift. Many peculiar theories based on circumstantial evidence are held by many people, and the end is wholly a surprise.

"This is a story of a nation during a century of struggle upward out of the abyss into which despotism and bigotry had sunk it. . . . I may fairly claim to possess some special qualifications for relating many of the incidents set forth in this history. In my youth I have listened open-eyed for hours to the tales of aged relatives and their friends who had borne active part in the great struggle early in the century. Some of them had been friends of Godoy, some of them companions in arms of Wellington and Hill. . . ."—Author's Introduction.

Hunter, T: History of philosophy for use in high schools, academies and colleges. N. Y., Amer. Book Co., [1900.] c. 128 p. S. (Science primers.) cl., 35 c.

Gives a simple and succinct account of the lives and doctrines of the great systematic philosophers and of those ancient and mediæval philosophers who have proposed some explanation of existence or some theory of conduct. The word "philosophy" in the title of the book, in accord with long-established usage, refers for the most part to metaphysics (or ontology) and in a less degree to ethics. Questions and a vocabulary complete the book.

Hussey, Eyre. On account of Sarah. Phil., Lippincott, 1900. 7+343 p. D. (Lippincott's select novels, no. 234.) cl., $1; pap., 50 c.

An English love story. Sarah has been engaged to her cousin since childhood. She goes to Girton and turns out a woman's rights and temperance lecturer and her lover demurs. Two other girls, one from Australia, represent true womanhood, and after fighting an old English grandfather's prejudices all ends happily and all "on account of Sarah."

Hutton, Baroness v. —. Marr'd in making; frontispiece by E. Plaisted Abbott. Phil., Lippincott, 1901. [1900. c.] 3-305 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A study of heredity in which a young girl's peculiar inherited nature is daringly depicted. The manuscript of this book was destroyed in the Lippincott fire, and the author rewrote it entirely from memory. The plot takes place in a pretty Pennsylvania town and later in Rome. The necessity of religion for good women is brought out by a very original character.

Thomas Huxley was born 1825 and died 1895. The life is practically told in letters to Darwin, Hooker, Lyell, Sir Michael Foster, Tyndall, Spencer, Haeckel, Charles Kingsley, Romanes and many more of the thinkers of the past half century. Dwells specially upon the prompt response of the Americans to Huxley's teachings. His whole life was an appeal for clearness and intellectual sincerity. Appendixes give Huxley's writings and list of positions held and honors conferred. Exhaustive index.

Hyne, C: J: Cutcliffe Wright. The lost continent. N. Y., Harper, 1900. c. 5+353 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

The scenes are laid in prehistoric times on the lost continent of Atlantis. The plot is involved and the author shows boldness of imagination in working it out. The people of the legendary island would seem to have been as self-seeking, wily and politic as those of the materialistic present.

The characters are an elderly sculptor, his young vivacious wife; the inspector at the Baths where they are spending a vacation; a landed proprietor, a sister of mercy, and a strange lady. Later the scene shifts to high mountain regions and the visions of life after death are strangely intermingled with daily events. As usual in Ibsen's work the woman seems to need the most change to become fit for the highest purposes.

Outlines the chief uses of fire, electricity and photography. Argues that electricity means as much for human progress as flame, and recites how it has begun to supplant flame in important tasks. Shows that the camera marks a radical departure in depiction, superseding the pencil and brush in many directions, and representing much not otherwise to be portrayed. The rapid flowering and utilization of these resources is emphasized; the author holds that similar "leaps" long ago divided man from his next of kin, and have at last dug betwixt them an impassable gulf.

The author divides his work into three parts: The man: The religious teacher; The philosopher of religion. As a record, not only of a man, but of a great and far-reaching theological movement of which Martineau was the leader, this book is a notable one. In preparing the work the author acknowledges valuable assistance from Dr. Martineau's children. Dr. Martineau was an English Unitarian clergyman, born at Norwich, England, April 21, 1805, who lived almost through the century. He was the author of many works, among others "Endeavors after Christian life," "Studies of Christianity," "Religion as affected by modern materialism."

Jacobs, W: Wymark. A master of craft. N. Y., F: A. Stokes Co., [1900.] c. '99, 1900. 3+339 p. D. cl., $1.50.
The hero, Captain Flower, is the captain of an English coasting vessel of the kind made famous in "Many cargoes" and "More cargoes." The captain confesses to having a great fascination for women, and when the story opens he is engaged to three, in one case under an assumed name. His struggles to escape a breach of promise suit and other threatened calamities, with the amusing attempts of his crew to help him in his strange complications, are described with much humor.

James, Edmund Janes. The government of a typical Prussian city—Halle a|S. Phil., Amer. Acad. of Political and Social Science, [1900.] 42 p. (Publications of the society, no. 274.) pap., 35 c.
Halle-on-the-Saale is mentioned as a city in 1024, and was accepted in the Hanseatic League as early as 1281. Of late it has become a great railroad and industrial centre. During the past fifty years its population has increased from 30,000 to 155,000. This is an examination of its peculiar scheme of government which, adopted for a small city belonging essentially to the last century, has been found satisfactory for a modern city of the highest type.

James, Mrs. Florence Alice Price. ["Florence Warden," pseud.] The plain Miss Cray. N. Y., F. M. Buckles Co., 1900. c. 327 p. D. cl., $1.25.
The open manœuvres of a match-making fashionable English woman to marry off her two daughters is the motive of the novel. The scene is a dilapidated old mansion, in one of the wildest parts of Ireland. The characters English and Irish. The eldest plain but witty Miss Cray carries off the rich man intended for her younger and pretty sister, who elopes with an impoverished Irish nobleman. There is a third love story verging on tragedy, and some clever and amusing talk.

James, G: Wharton. In and around the Grand Canyon: the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River in Arizona. Bost., Little, Brown & Co., 1900. c. 13+341 p. O. cl., $3.
The work is the outcome of ten years' visits during which the author has explored the wild trails of the Canyon and has gathered all the local history concerning this natural wonder. The legends of the Indians are a distinct contribution to American folklore. The illustrations are from photographs taken on the spot. There are 30 full-page plates and 70 text illustrations. Bibliography of the Grand Canyon region, and an exhaustive report on its geology.

What is here presented began as a series of oral lessons by one of the authors given to classes of children. These lessons were afterwards put into manuscript form for the use of the Oakland (Cal.) schools, later they were used as leaflets printed by the Oakland School Department. They have been issued in the present form in response to a still wider demand.

Jenks, Jeremiah Whipple. The trust problem. N. Y., McClure, Phillips & Co., 1900. c. 17+281 p. D. cl., net, $1.

A work on industrial combinations, treating of such topics as competition, monopoly, organization and management, wages, and legislative control. Presents and discusses the plans of Roosevelt, W. J. Bryan, and Comptroller Coler with regard to trust legislation. An appendix contains the report of the U. S. Industrial Commission, Governor Roosevelt's anti-trust bill, and other valuable material. Illustrated with five charts in colors, demonstrating the effects of trusts on prices.

Jennings, Edwin B. People and property. N. Y., Abbey Press, [1900.] c. 109 p. por. D. cl., 50 c.

The writer divides his subject into four parts, "The gaining of wealth," "The sharing of wealth," "The using of wealth," and "Conclusions." The book deals with topics of current interest, the great trusts, landlordism, the struggle for existence on the part of the workingmen, etc. Shows that the property of the people is largely being grasped by a few trusts.

Jennings, J: J., ["J. J. J." pseud.] Widow Magoogin. N. Y., G: W. Dillingham Co., 1900. c. 4-364 p. D. cl., $1.25.

"Widow Magoogin" began to free her mind on topics of the day to her neighbor, Mrs. McGlaggerty, as far back as 1842. She continued her conversations, first in the St. Louis Critic, and later in the New York Sunday Mercury, until 1894. The author makes this statement, to show that "Widow Magoogin" is not "a base imitation, but an original creation." Her voluble remarks in Irish dialect upon the fashions, music and the drama, her own sex, matrimony, etc., are very funny.

Jerome, Jerome Klapka. Three men on wheels; il. by Harrison Fisher. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1900. c. 8+299 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A sequel to the author's famous "Three men in a boat." The same three men appear again in this narrative, which describes a bicycle tour through Germany. There is a succession of absurd anecdotes and reflections about the people of the country through which they pass, which added to the hero's own ridiculous experiences make the book most amusing reading.

"This volume is intended to be supplementary to the volumes of the cycle of Bible study for college students published by the Students' Department of the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations. It partakes somewhat of their character, in that it presents a scheme of Bible readings which covers the main trend of Scripture teaching. But its supreme purpose is to combine with this study of the Word the emphasis which is everywhere found on its pages, upon the duty and opportunity to live to help men to know God and to win them to Jesus Christ."—Preface.

Moscow, and Vienna, and in the armies of the Austrians and Hungarians. The story follows the fortunes of three young Hungarian noblemen, whose careers are involved in the historical incidents of the time.

Jókai, Maurus. A Christian but a Roman. N. Y., Doubleday & McClure Co., 1900. c. 4+166 p. S. (Short novel ser.) cl., 50 c.
A story of the days of the Cæsars when the viciousness of Rome's rulers began to foreshadow its downfall. The great Hungarian novelist paints a realistic picture of colossal power, imperial abandonments, and the persecution of the early Christians.

Jókai, Maurus. The day of wrath. N. Y., McClure, Phillips & Co., 1900. 4-352 p. D. cl., $1.25.
This novel is a bitter satire on the abuses and anomalies due to the semi-feudal conditions of Hungary for centuries before the land was finally conquered by Austria with Russian help. Its vividly terrible episodes appal and fascinate. The descriptions of the plague-stricken land, and the burning of the headsmans are side by side with poetic and romantic pictures. Gentleness and heroism are triumphant. The time is 1848-49.

Jókai, Maurus. Debts of honor; from the Hungarian, by Arthur B. Yoland. N. Y., Doubleday & McClure Co., 1900. c. 5+417 p. D. cl., $1.25.
The story of a Hungarian family, full of adventures with gypsies and robber and reckless nobles, etc.

Prof. Kaye approaches the subject from three points of view. First, the various documents, such as charters, commissions and letters of instruction to the governors, have been considered in order to determine the scope and character of the power conferred on the executive officers in the several colonies, the means by which they were limited in the use of the executive prerogative and the instruments at hand with which to enforce their commands. Second, the connection between the executive in the colonies and the mother colonies is examined, and, finally, the executive is discussed in its relation to the popular assemblies and legislatures as they rose to prominence.

An unusual marriage made by a beautiful middle-class English girl to a misanthropic and eccentric nobleman is the basis of a pretty love story, which has its scene almost entirely in the ancient manor that had been the home of the Stratheldons for many generations. The manor is reported to be haunted, and there is a mystery and the suspicion of a crime clinging to the master of the manor. The story is evolved through many dramatic scenes. A true affection is the magic which dispels the mystery, and conquers the morbid nature of Lord Stratheldon.

Kennard, Mrs. Arthur. The second Lady Delcombe. Phil., Lippincott, 1900. 2+328 p. D. (Lippincott's select novels, no. 231.) cl., $1; pap., 50 c.

The Earl of Delcombe's first wife had eloped with another man, and he had been through the divorce court. When his only son is sixteen he finds himself through his losses on the race track in a perplexing condition. He must either work, or marry an heiress. He elects to do the latter, and is accepted by Rita Frost, a rich American girl, who frankly admits she is marrying him for his title and his beautiful old home. The story shows the gradual growing of a mutual love between husband and wife. The boy "Tony" is a fresh and natural character. There are two other love stories as side issues. The scenes are laid in fashionable English life in town and country.

Not intended to supplant any text-book in grammar, but rather to provide for a profitable continuation of grammar-study in high schools and normal schools. The book is based upon the English sentence as it has been written during the present century. No attempt has been made to criticise any form or variation of sentence structure. Instead, sentences are examined as they have been constructed by reputable authors, with a view to determining the adequacy of their structure to the communication of thought.

Kirkman, Marshall Monroe. The romance of Gilbert Holmes: an historical novel. Chic., World Railway Publishing Co., 1900. c. 425 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.
The hero's early life was spent in the west, as the country about the Mississippi valley was called in the first half of the century. Here his romance found its setting. It is a story of pure love and domestic life, and adventure in a pioneer country, reading very much like a real biography. Gilbert Holmes was born in 1826 in Illinois and tells many interesting stories of the wild life of his youth. He met Lincoln and Jefferson Davis and fought through the Civil War.

Bradford Rhodes, the editor, says in his preface "no country in the world can equal the United States in the number of its banks or in the variety of banking systems. At some time in our history nearly every theory in regard to credit and banking has been tried, with results that may be studied with interest and profit. To chronicle these experiences without conscious bias has been the aim of the publishers of this volume." The late John J. Knox, who as comptroller of the currency for many years, had charge of the execution of the laws relating to National banks, was in the best position to obtain the information and gather the material for a work of this kind. He did not live to complete this work, Mr. Rhodes bringing it up to date.

Lang, Andrew. A history of Scotland, from the Roman occupation. In 2 v. v. 1. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1900. 27+509 p. por. O. cl., net, $3.50.
"This volume is an attempt to examine the elements and forces which went to the making of the Scottish people, and to record the more important events which occurred between the Roman occupation and the death of Cardinal Beaton in 1546. His assassination did not absolutely ruin, but it greatly weakened, the old ecclesiastical policy of reliance on France and resistance to England. I have done my best, within my limits, to include sketches of social life and manners from a very early period."—Preface.

Lapsley, Gaillard T: The county palatine of Durham: a study in constitutional history. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1900. c. '99. 11+380 p. O. cl., net, $2.
"During the middle ages, and in a restricted sense up to the present century, the county of Durham was withdrawn from the ordinary administration of the kingdom of England and governed by its Bishop, with almost complete local independence. But the community of Durham had the same social and economic requirements and dangers as the rest of the kingdom; accordingly there developed in the county a group of institutions reproducing all the essential characteristics of the central government. To exhibit the growth of these institutions, their organization, and their relation to the central government, is the object of the present study, which thus becomes the constitutional history of an English county."—Introduction.

A description of the poverty oppression and utter hopelessness of the ignorant Italian peasantry. The river Edera ran through a farming country a day's journey from Rome. Its waters were to be turned from their course to run a new syndicate electric enterprise. It meant ruin to the peasants, and they combined against it with dire consequences to the hero and heroine. A gifted priest banished to this lonely region by the church is the leading spirit of the story.

Leonard, Delavan Levant, D.D. Missionary annals of the nineteenth century; a history, a book of reference, and an interesting story combined, of the progress of the kingdom in mission lands during the past one hundred years. Cleveland, O., F. M. Barton. [1899.] c. 286 p. il. pors. map, D. cl., $1.50.
Three preliminary chapters relate to Early and Medieval Missions, Modern Missions before Carey and the Carey Epoch; and then the current century is divided into ten-year periods, with an entire chapter devoted to each. Secular and religious movements are referred to which have a bearing upon missions, the organization of missionary societies, and the opening of new missions, and then the unevangelized fields are taken up with a setting forth of the progress made in each during the period.

Agnes Alden has grown up on the outskirts of a great town in constant companionship with her father, who lived wholly among the classics and absolutely refused to read a modern poet. A volume of poetry falls into Agnes's hands and almost at the same time she meets the poet. He is married, and the story deals chiefly with Agnes's influence for good upon his loving, selfish, unreliable and jealous wife. There is a secret in the life of the poet that leads to the tragic climax.

This work, the first of a new series, has a two-fold purpose. Its first aim is to classify the linguistic material of this Upanisad for the use of philologists in studying the life and growth of the language spoken by the ancient Hindus, and in determining the literary relation of the Chaudogya to other Upanisads and to the general mass of Sanskrit literature. Its second aim is to furnish sufficient grammatical and lexical data to serve as a special dictionary for those who shall read this piece of literature for the first time. Bibliography (1 p.).

Contains about 95,000 entries of important historical events. The arrangement of this material is on a new quick-reference plan. First there is a classification in alphabetical order by countries, or by geographical location; second, a classification by dates; third, a classification according to the nature of the event itself. These classifications answer the three questions Where? When? What? These classifications have a key in a copious index of two hundred and ninety pages, containing one hundred and twenty-five thousand entries, in which all the events and names recorded in the book are again entered, in alphabetical order and on the topical plan. This great work of reference is the result of nine years' labor on the part of the editor, with the aid of a large corps of helpers.

Lloyd, H: Demarest. Newest England; notes of a democratic traveller in New Zealand, with some Australian comparisons. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1900. c. 4+387 p. il. O. cl., $2.50.

The author of "A country without strikes," "Wealth against commonwealth" and "Labor copartnership," spent the greater part of last year in New Zealand and Australia making a first-hand investigation into the new developments of democratic government in these British colonies; and he has prepared an elaborate and authoritative explanation of the workings of these extensions of democracy, in a volume to which he has given the suggestive title of "Newest England." Mr. Lloyd has the benefit of the acquaintance of the foremost men in all the colonies.

Lloyd, J: Uri. Stringtown on the pike: a tale of northernmost Kentucky. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1900. 6+414 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

By the author of "Etidorhpa." This story was The Bookman serial for 1900. The scene is laid in one of the quaint villages in northeast Kentucky. The action begins at the time of the war of secession, when the hero is a ragged little urchin trudging along the dusty pike, and continues until the boy is well into manhood

Lloyd, Nelson. The chronic loafer. N. Y., J. F. Taylor & Co., 1900. c. 254 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A village store in the heart of Pennsylvania is the scene; here the tinner, the blacksmith, the miller, the school teacher, the veteran, the storekeeper, and the loafer assemble around the stove and spin their yarns in a peculiar dialect. The stories are mostly humorous.

Lobben, Peder. N. Y., D. Van Nostrand Co., 1900. c. '99 3+438 p. O. cl., $2.50.

The author says that this book is the outcome of years of study, work, and observation; he hopes that it may be a help to the class of people to which he himself belongs—the working mechanics of the world. It is not intended solely as a reference book, but may be studied advantageously by the ambitious young engineer and machinist; therefore, as far as believed practical within the scope of the work, the fundamental principles upon which the rules and formulas rest are given and explained.

An ideal English country gentleman and his son, a noted physician, are the chief characters in a story written to enforce that it is well to let "mercy temper justice." Both men had noble wives who in their youth had yielded to temptation. How the father, mellowed by life, looks upon human weakness is strongly contrasted with the hard judgment of his virtuous and untempted son.

Logan, Algernon Sydney. Amy Warren: a tale of the Bay Shore. N. Y., G: W. Dillingham Co., 1900. c. 3-370 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The central figure of this story by the author of "Not on the chart," is Harold Littleton, a young city clubman, accustomed to a life of ease and bachelor luxury. He has good underlying principles, however, which are somewhat benumbed by his idle life and great prospects. A visit to a great tract of land once the property of his father, where he meets and becomes engaged to a true hearted girl, brings out all that is best in him, making him self-reliant in the days of adversity which come to him.

The heroine "Mirry-Ann" is a Manx girl, of a specially spiritual nature. She is only known as "Old Ned Gawne's girl," but she is far above the fisher people of her native village in knowledge and education. Her love-story and the story of her unknown mother are the pathetic incidents. She is loved by three men, all of different characters and well drawn. The scene is the Isle of Man.

Contains descriptions of nearly two hundred trees and a number of shrubs. A chapter entitled "The growth of trees" deals with their structure, peculiarities, and sources of life. Arranged according to the kind of soil in which trees grow. Family, shape, height, range, and time of bloom are all given in each case. A full analysis of each plant also accompanies the text. Indexes of illustrations, entire trees, common names, scientific names, technical terms, and a miscellaneous index aid in making identification easy. Has sixty-four full-page colored plates, one hundred full-page black and white plates, sixty-four engravings of complete trees, and fifty-five diagrams.

Love, W. De Loss. Samson Occom and the Christian Indians of New England. Bost., Pilgrim Press, [1900.] '99. 10+370 p. il. por. D. cl., net, $1.50.

A historical study of Indian civilization as illustrated in the life and labors of Samson Occom, the Mohegan teacher, missionary, hymn-writer, and statesman. The author, after reviewing the relation of the New England fathers to Indian civilization in the first century of our history, takes up the work of the second century among the Indians of Southern New England, of whom Samson Occom was the principal figure. He tells the story of the hero's youth, education as the pupil of Rev. Eleazar Wheelock, of Lebanon, Ct., and experiences as an Indian teacher among the Montauk tribe.

Six workingmen, experiencing the evils and imperfections of the industrial and social conditions under which they labor, meet to discuss those conditions and to seek the causes of those evils. Their investigations lead them to the conclusion that the causes of the inequality of which they feel the burden are to be sought in the defects of religious systems. The debates disclose truths which crystallize into practical form. The truth-seekers, rich and poor, consecrate themselves to the principles which they find revealed, and believe that their discoveries will lead to tangible and potent changes in the world of economics and religion.

This is meant as a supplement, rather than a continuation, of Sir George Nicholls' "History of the English poor law." Further, the author says, "it is not intended to be a manual of poor law practice, nor a detailed account of the statutes and orders which govern the administration of the law. Its object is to set out the economic rather than the legal history of the subject, and to supply a review of principles and events narrated both in this and the earlier volumes from the standpoint of a later generation."

Mackinnon, Ja. History of Edward the Third (1327-1377.) N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1900. 20+625 p. O. cl., net, $5.

"The history of Edward III. is practically that of England for half a century, and embraces that of Scotland, France, the Low Countries, and Spain, in a more limited degree. The work is, therefore, more than a biography; it is a history of an important and dramatic epoch, as influenced and overshadowed by the extraordinary man who was the motive power of the activity of his age. It is in this spirit that the book was conceived and executed, and while shunning no labor to obtain original information."—Preface.

Opens with the Oregon dispute, and traces the growth of the Monroe Doctrine. After reviewing the important foreign relations of Monroe's second term, Prof. McMaster returns to domestic affairs, discussing the breaking up of the Republican party, and sketching certain social, political, literary, and industrial conditions which paved the way for the triumph of Jackson and Democracy. Socialistic movements and labor reforms, problems in city government, the introduction of gas and anthracite coal, the opening of the Erie Canal, the early railroads, the negro problem, the industrial revolution, the tariff and the States-rights doctrine of Calhoun, a study of the common schools in our first half century, and a striking survey of British criticism of the United States, are among the themes vividly presented.

Martin, Mrs. Helen Riemensnyder. The elusive Hildegarde: a novel. N. Y., R. F. Fenno & Co., [1900.] c. 4-327 p. D. cl., $1.25.
Dr. Lyon Kent, the son of an influential judge of Charleston, is when introduced apparently a reserved cold man, who is chiefly concerned because of his father's marriage to a vulgar flaunting woman, whose chief characteristic is extravagance. The Doctor is so opposed to his step-mother that he considers her daughter in the same category as his father's wife. He meets his step-sister, however, masquerading as a nursery governess who is known as Miss Holmes. Under this name she manages to evade Dr. Kent and perform the sacrifice which lead her to be called "The elusive Hildegarde.

Martin, Mrs. Herbert. Jock's ward. N. Y., R. F. Fenno & Co., [1900.] 3-246 p. D. cl., $1.
Jock was a London "gutter snipe" who had been kindly treated by a shoemaker belonging to a sect that believed wholly in prayer to cure disease. His only son died of pneumonia, he was accused of manslaughter and imprisoned. He comes out dazed, having lost faith in everything. Jock takes him into the country, works and slaves for him and he is known as "Jock's ward." Pure religion and church systems are contrasted.

Mason, Caroline Atwater. A woman of yesterday. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1900. c. 5+367 p. D. cl., $1.50.

In this novel Mrs. Mason has made a study of the development of a young girl, born in the middle of the century and growing up to womanhood in the straightest orthodoxy of that time, who undergoes the transition in religious life and thought which the last fifty years has brought. The gradual change in the point of view is carefully worked out; and the altruism of the earlier period appears to suffer for a time only to take a new and nobler shape.

Mr. Matthews has selected as his theme the infatuation of a young society girl and wife for the stage, which has been brought about by success in private theatricals. She tells her husband she is going on the stage, and their home is about to be broken up when she changes her mind. Society chit-chat is handled in Mr. Matthews's best manner.

Maxwell, Mrs. Mary Eliz. Braddon. The infidel: a romance. N. Y., Harper, 1900. c. 2+454 p. D. cl., $1.50.

William Thornton and his daughter Antonia pursued the profession of letters in London when George the Second was King. They wrote plays and essays, made translations and furnished smart paragraphs for the society journals. Antonia had been brought up like a boy, early fed upon Voltaire and taught to discredit all creeds. With all her lack of faith she is a beautiful character, with high ideals of right. She is shown under a strong temptation, from which she escapes untouched. The time is the dawn of Methodism in England, Wesley and his followers being strong elements in the story.

Meriwether, Lee. A lord's courtship: a novel. Chic., Laird & Lee, 1900. c. 288 p. il. D. cl., $1.

Rich Americans in Europe are the leading characters. The lord in the tale is mercenary but not grotesquely so; he finally falls honestly in love with the girl he first courted for her money. He is refused, as the heroine is true to her childhood sweetheart, a struggling member of the Georgia bar. The episode of the wandering freak, of the bogus nobleman, and of the Italian count's love making, are very funny.

"It will be seen by those who read the story, that while the men who composed this organization were the equals of any to be found in other regiments, and far superior to the average of the men who staid at home, they were only human beings; that no effort has been made to hide faults or mistakes, and that the aim of the writer has been simply to give a truthful record of the life of plain American youth, who followed the flag until it floated over every spot from which it had been torn down."—Preface.

The author has been for nearly twenty years the correspondent of the London Times, resident in Peking. During that time he has been brought into contact with not only the highest of Chinese officialdom, but with the representatives of foreign powers. A careful observer, and a close student of all questions bearing upon the Chinese problem, he knows whereof he writes, and in this volume has discussed with rare calmness and sobriety the many perplexing questions which have culminated in the present deplorable outbreak in China.

Mighels, Philip Verrill. Nella: the heart of the army: a novel. N. Y., R. F. Fenno & Co., [1900.] c. 4-395 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The author is an American living in London. His novel deals with the problem of unskilled woman labor. He advocates the organization of an army for women—an out and out military organization, the sole aim and object of which is to train and equip girls and women for household and other labors. He advocates recruiting, drilling, uniforming, disciplining, training and quartering the girl-soldiers in barracks.

The umbrella in question is a ragged red affair, which was according to the village gossip of Glogova bestowed upon the parish priest's baby sister by St. Peter. This umbrella and a brass caldron are the fetishes of the story. The caldron causes strife in several families and turmoil in many parishes. The history of the umbrella is traced to its original owner.

Mill, Hugh Rob., ed. International geography; by seventy authors. N. Y., Appleton, 1900. c. '99. 12+1086 p. O. $3.50.

The object is to present in one volume an authoritative summary of the whole of geography as fully as space permits. The limit of size makes it impossible to treat any part of the subject exhaustively, but by sacrificing such details as may be found better expressed in the maps of an atlas it is possible to give prominence to the essential facts. Like most treatises on geography, the work is divided into two unequal and contrasted parts. The first deals with the "Principles of geography" and their applications in the most general sense. The second part deals more fully with the "Countries of the world" at the present day; each article involving the application of some or all of the general principles stated in the first part. List of standard geographical books of reference. (1 p.).

Mitchell, Silas Weir, M.D. Autobiography of a quack. [Also] The case of George Dedlow; il. by A. J. Keller N. Y., Century Co., 1900. c. '99, 1900. 10+149 p. D. cl., $1.25.

An exposition of the mental processes by which a man born without moral sense seeks to justify himself in the devices by which he seeks to get what he regards as his share of the money of his countrymen. An unsympathetic world fails to appreciate this somewhat selfish point of view, and, with occasional intervals of prosperity, the quack's career tends steadily and inevitably downward. Bound up with the autobiography of Ezra Sandcraft is "The strange case of George Dedlow"—a professedly autobiographical record of the experience of an army surgeon who has lost all his limbs by amputation.

Mitchell, Silas Weir, M.D. Dr. North and his friends. N. Y., Century Co., 1900. c. 7+499 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The author re-introduces in this story the personages that figured first in "Characteristics," to which however, this is not a sequel. It is, of course, a gifted group of friends that Dr. North and his wife gather about them, and their conversations on matters connected with literature, art, medicine, nature, conduct and religion are the polished utterances of well-bred, intelligent people, familiar with books and acquainted with the world. A simple thread of romance gives unity to the record of their walks and talks, but the character of the work is such that one may dip into it anywhere for a half-hour's mental refreshment.

A series of letters written in 1865, by an attaché of the English legation at Peking, and the author of "Tales of old Japan," "The bamboo garden," etc. The old order changes so slowly in the Orient, that they are still a faithful record of the life which was led by those whose duties lay, as the Chinese say, "within the walls." Their subjects are Hong-Kong, Canton, Shanghai, the Peiho River, Peking, the Prince of Kung, a temple hotel, a state funeral, the summer palace, a mandarin at home, Emperor Chien Lung, how mandarins are made, etc.

Molesworth, Mrs. Mary Louise, ["Ennis Graham," pseud.] The Grim house. N. Y., T. Whittaker, 1900. 3+289 p. il. D. cl., $1.25.

A mystery is centered in "Grim House," as an old-fashioned, lonely English mansion is called by the village folk. Four people have lived there for nearly twenty years, without making the acquaintance of any one about them. The mystery is unfolded by two girl friends, in a succession of entertaining episodes. The story is not without its romance.

Monroe, Anne Shannon. Eugene Norton: a tale from the sagebrush land. N. Y. and Chic., Rand, McNally & Co., [1900.] c. 291 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A young American girl is called home after her first triumph as a singer in Berlin. To please an irate, imperious father she marries a man connected with mining interests and departs for lonely camp life. Eugene Morton heard her sing in Berlin and followed her to America. He is a physician and full of noble ideals. The outcome is unexpected.

Moore, Frank Frankfort. The conscience of Coralie. Chic., H. S. Stone & Co., 1900. c. 3+467 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.
A young American girl visting friends in London is the "Coralie" of the title. Although a western girl, and the only child of a millionaire, she is troubled with a "New England conscience," which makes the fashionable life she is thrown into seem very frivolous to her. This side of her character is played upon by an unscrupulous socialist she is brought into contact with. He desires to marry her for her money, and uses hypnotism with other forces to gain his end. He is cleverly ungeneraled, and Coralie marries a fine young Englishman.

Morley, J: Oliver Cromwell. N. Y., Century Co., 1900. 7+486 p. il. O. cl., $3.50.

The reading world has become acquainted with this biography through the pages of the Century, in which magazine it has been running since November of 1899. Mr. Morley has given us more than a biography. The "Life of Oliver Cromwell" is a history—an absolute picture of the conditions of Cromwell's time, and the cause and effect of the great protectorate. The Hon. John Morley, born in Blackburn, December 24, 1833, has from his earliest entry into the arena of public affairs occupied a position of prominence and trust. As editor of the Fortnightly Review, Member of Parliament, and Secretary for Ireland he has proved himself pre-eminently a man of sterling worth and rare parts. As a biographer his ""Edmund Burke," "Rousseau," and "Voltaire" place him in the front rank.

Morrison, Arthur. Cunning Murrell. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1900. c. 7+288 p. D. buckram, $1.50.

The author of "Tales of mean streets" forsakes the London slums for the little village of Hadleigh forty years ago. At that time it was a country in the middle of the century—where people were still apt to be "swum" for witchcraft, and smuggling French brandy was the most lucrative occupation that offered; Cunning Murrell, wise man and witch-finder, is the chief figure in a story of by-gone beliefs that now seem mediæval almost.

Morrison, Mary Gray. The sea-farers: a romance of a New England coast town. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1900. 4+326 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A novel of life in a New England seashore town. It covers the period just before and just after the Civil War, and presents the spirit of those changing times, and the contrast between the merchant princes of former days and the settlers of the new west. A most dramatic portion of the story, full of color and adventure, deals with a band of pirates in the Mediterranean, the fact that piracy actually did exist as late as the date of this tale being well authenticated.

Newcomb, C: B. Discovery of a lost trail. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1900. c. 282 p. D. cl., $1.50.
The author of "All's right with the world" now makes a simple study of human life and offers plain suggestions how confidence, patience, gladness, and decision will bring wanderers back to the trail that has been lost through opposite characteristics. The keynote of his book is "Life is as we make it here."

Newcomb, Simon. . Elements of astronomy. N. Y., Amer. Book Co., [1900.] c. 3-240 p. il. D. cl., $1.
"Two objects have been kept in view in preparing this little book. One was to condense those facts and laws of the science which are of most interest and importance to the general intelligent public within so small a compass as not to make a very serious addition to the curriculum of the high school or college. The other was so to present the subject that as little formal mathematics as possibe should be necessary to its mastery."—Preface.

Newcomb, Simon. His wisdom the defender: a story. N. Y., Harper, 1900. c. 5+329 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.
This is the first fiction of the famous astronomer. It is the novel of the air-ship. The hero is an American scientist of tremendous intellectual ability and physical energy, who constructs the perfect air-ship. There is a thrilling account of its first journey above our atmosphere, seventy miles above the earth, at the rate of over ninety miles a minute.

Newell, Lyman Churchill. Experimental chemistry. Bost., Heath, 1900. c. 15+410 p. D. cl., $1.10.
The purpose is to promote the more efficient teaching of chemistry by modern methods. To do this the author has provided about two hundred representative experiments with enough explanatory text to make the experiments logical, systematic, and intelligible.

The product of over twenty years of almost continuous application on the author's part to the study and teaching of church history. "It has been his constant endeavor in every part of the volume to incorporate the best results of recent research, and to furnish to his readers information at once trustworthy, impartial, and fairly adequate on every topic discussed. Bibliographies precede each chapter.

Newman, Homer Edmund. The manifestation of the idea. Cin., W. H. Ferguson Co., [1900.] c. 556 p. O. cl., $1.
The writer thus explains his work: "God is mind. Mind is His being. In this mind (which is Him) He begot the idea. Having begot the idea within Himself that idea is Him. This idea was to raise up unto Himself a son begotten by His spirit This idea living in God, as God it became the pattern by which all things in creation was formed. the moulder of all things, the creator of all things, and by it all things consist and without it was nothing made that was made." The book begins with the first chapter of Genesis and ends with the last verse of Revelation, and the whole aim of the writer is to prove that this idea was and is the word of power by which all things were and are.

Norris, Frank. A man's woman. N. Y., Doubleday & McClure Co., 1900. c. '99-1900. 5+286 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The story opens in the Arctic region, with a small handful of men lost in the ice, the remnant of an expedition sent out to find the North Pole. The two heroes are introduced, intimate friends of opposite characters, whose loyal love for one another leads to a falsehood with one of them about a woman they both love. The woman is a trained nurse. The return of the men to civilization brings the woman into both their lives in a dramatic manner. Arctic exploration is again the final theme. By the author of "McTeague."

"The scope of this volume differs somewhat from that of its predecessors in the same series. They dealt with remoter times and less familiar authors, so were bound to give much detailed information. In this volume, concerned mainly with writers whose names are household words, it has been thought sufficient to give only such particulars as were required to bring out the general effect. Neither biography nor bibliography have been made prominent. The wish was to paint a general picture, preferring broad outlines to finished studies; to depict a movement by showing it embodied in its representatives." —Preface.

O'Neil, Rev. J. L. Was Savonarola really excommunicated? An inquiry. Bost., Marlier, Callanan & Co., 1900. c. 8+202 p. por. D. cl., net, 75 c.

For 400 years the opinion has prevailed that Savonarola died under the ban of excommunication at the hand of Pope Alexander VI. The author reaches the conviction that the papal action having been based on false information, the excommunication itself was invalid. He presents in order the essential testimony and weaves in the briefs and letters of pope and friar. Another volume on "Was Savonarola a prophet?" is in preparation. Gives a classed list of works to which reference is made (6 p.)

Oppenheim, E. Phillips. A millionaire of yesterday. Phil., Lippincott, 1900. 3-315 p. D. (Lippincott's select novels, no. 230.) cl., $1; pap., 50 c.

The scene opens in South Africa. Two fellow travellers join interests in a mining claim which they expect will yield a fabulous fortune when their rights are recognized by the English government. Their hopes are realized after the supposed death of the elder man, and according to contract the entire fortune falls to the younger one, who later figures in England as a millionaire, where he meets his former partner's daughter, and on her account he is known as "A millionaire of yesterday;" in this role he is seen at his best.

The term "Jay-hawkers" was applied during the Civil War to men who combined pillage and guerilla fighting; the name was originally conferred because of the agility displayed by these free booters when they pounced upon an enemy. The scenes are in Kansas and Missouri. The sacking of Lawrence is one of the most dramatic incidents in a novel which introduces Quantrell, the celebrated guerilla.

The author has created an imaginary island in the South Pacific, whose inhabitants, ignorant of the outside world, are given over to the worship of an active volcano on the island, the "Mountain Moloch." It is a harsh god and demands human sacrifice in the person of the king's beautiful daughter. A young lieutenant of the United States Navy appears upon the scene and falls in love with the princess. Hard fighting and many mysterious perils ensue. By the author of "The spell of Ashtaroth."

The first three sections, namely, (1) Origin, nature, and kinds of interest, (2) Importance of interest in the acts of ideation and reasoning, and (3) Importance of interest in volition and action, discuss the subject from its psychological side. The aim has been simply to give positive hints as to how, on the basis of the ruling fundamental views of psychology, a doctrine of interest might be established which should be free from contradictions, not only with those psychological premises, but also with itself. The last section contains pedagogical conclusions and applications.

In England in the last centuries of the middle ages there were two classes of men, the free and the unfree, both subdivided into various classes. The unfree were known in common parlance as bondsmen or villains. It is the gradual extension of the rights of these villains in the eastern, midland and southern counties of England, and the abolition of their disabilities till they were on an equality with freemen, that this paper discusses.

"The bread line" is the concourse of cold and hungry people that forms each winter night at Fleischmann's bakery, New York City. Three impecunious young bohemians and a scheming adviser put all their hopes in starting a family paper that is to circulate millions, etc. One is an artist and centres all his talent on a picture of this "bread line." All the advertising clap-trap of newspaper work is shown up before the young enthusiasts acknowledge defeat and one New Year's night take their places on "the bread line."

Conspicuous in the group of characters who figure in the novel as social sinners, is Barbara Eckert, an American girl of German parentage. Barbara is, when introduced, a fairly pretty country girl, who has a distaste for her home surrounding and a fixed belief that she is possessed of powers which, if properly used, will eventually be the means of transforming her into a great lady. With these views the heroine goes to New York, and meets with a fate similar to many underpaid working girls.

In this story Grant Burton, hero of the previous volume, returns to school vastly improved by his experiences. Through his leadership another club of enthusiastic young sportsmen is formed, not hostile to the first, described in previous volumes, but in friendly rivalry, in pursuance of which they engage in a series of contests, including a hunting match, a fishing match, boat race, etc.

Parkin, G: Rob. Edward Thring, headmaster of Uppingham school: life, diary, and letters. [New cheaper ed., abridged.] N. Y., Macmillan, 1900. 19+513 p. por. O. cl., $2.
The first edition of this work was published in two volumes. In preparing the material for a cheaper issue it has been found necessary to omit a good deal that was contained in the first edition. The omissions consist chiefly of details of school life and portions of correspondence originally inserted because they had special interest for readers personally associated with Uppingham. In making excisions the author has aimed at retaining all that was essential to the illustration of Thring's educational ideas. Some rearrangement of the material has also seemed advisable.

In 1898 and 1899 the author was in China, under retainer of an American syndicate to examine, survey, and report on an extensive railway enterprise, and the duties connected with his professional work placed him in an exceptional position to study and observe this interesting country and its people from quite a different point of view from that taken by other writers. The journey was chiefly through Hu-nau, a little-known province of China. He gives his impressions of the people and the country from the standpoint of industrial development as it exists at present and along the lines it is likely to follow in the future.

A careful study of the origins of English literature, tracing its development up to the time when it assumed its permanent form. The author shows that the literature of England has been a gradual growth; that it has flowed out of the national life and is inseparately intertwined with the national history. A distinguishing mark is the citing of recent authority and the use of quotations and estimates from the latest reprints and editions. A select list of authors is prefixed to every chapter and division of the book. Author is professor of English and rhetoric in the Pennsylvania State College.

Payne, Dutton. Mistress Penwick. N. Y., R. F. Fenno & Co., 1900. c. '99. 2-399 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Mistress Penwick is supposed to have lived in the reign of Charles II. When introduced she is the ward of Cedric, Earl of Crandlemar. The novel is founded on interesting incidents in the life of Lord Cedric's ward, who was unfortunate enough after she went to live at Crandlemar Castle, to incur the displeasure of Lady Constance Carnot, who plotted against both Mistress Penwick and Lord Cedric. Her counterplotting causes a separation of the lovers, and the imprisonment of the Earl, with other events described.

Peake, Elmore Elliott. The Darlingtons. N. Y., McClure, Phillips & Co., 1900. c. 5+416 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The Darlingtons are a railroad family in a western town, somewhere in the neighborhood of Kansas City. The author knows the railroad from the lowest stone of the road-bed to the highest combinations of Traffic Associations and investments. Thrilling railroad adventures influence the lives of the actors. Carol Darlington, the auditor and comptroller of the railroad, runs locomotives, and disposes of the most complicated financial problems, and is withal an affectionate womanly woman that makes a happy atmosphere around her. A clergyman, a forceful and attractive man, divides the interest with Carol.

Pease, Verne S. In the wake of war: a tale of the south under Carpet-bagger administration. Chic. and N. Y., G: M. Hill Co., 1900. c. 4+440 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The scene is laid chiefly in Tennessee in the years immediately following the close of the Rebellion. Gives a telling picture of the conditions brought about by Northern "Carpet-baggers," which made it so difficult for Southerners to reconstruct their devastated homes. Describes the secret work of Ku-Klux-Klan. The attitude of Gen. Thomas towards his conquered foes is warmly praised. The emancipated slaves are important elements in a fine love story.

Peffer, W: A. Americanism and the Philippines. Topeka, Kan., Crane & Co., 1900. c. '99. 150 p. D. pap., 25 c.

Senator Peffer, of Kansas, discusses the following propositions: Whether making the Philippines ours is contrary to the established policy of our government in respect to the acquisition of territory; whether opposed to the advice of Washington in his farewell address; whether it violates the principles of the Monroe doctrine, has no warrant in the Constitution and is not in harmony with the spirit of the Declaration of Independence. Also if our President is aiming to establish an imperial government there. All of these propositions he answers in the negative.

Pemberton, Max. Féo: a romance. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1900. c. '99. 5+299 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

Treats of the infatuation of Prince Jerome for a young opera singer and the romantic consequences of his passion. The principal scenes of the story are enacted in Vienna, London, and Paris, sometimes in old chateaux, in French restaurants, and in the Vienna opera house.

Pemberton, Max. The footsteps of a throne: being the story of an idler and his work and of what he did in Moscow in the house of exile. N. Y., Appleton, 1900. c. 5+309 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

The introductory scene is a private gambling house in Paris. Here Lord Dane, a young Englishman, makes a call, thinking he is entering a private house, and meets a beautiful young Russian princess, who appears to be an inveterate gambler. The time is the present, the scene afterwards changing to Moscow, and remaining in Russia to the end. The princess becomes involved in political intrigue, her life being in peril. She is saved by Lord Dane who had followed her to Russia.

Pemberton, T. Edgar. The Kendals: a biography. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1900. 9+340 p. pors. O. cl., $3.

Pemberton, W: S. Childe. The Baroness de Bode, 1775-1803. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1900. 18+296 p. por. O. cl., $5.

The Baron de Bode held in 1789 a fief in Alsace, one of the last relics of feudalism in France which the Republic swept away. He and his family took refuge in Germany, the Baroness visited many courts and finally St. Petersburg, and the Empress Catherine II. granted her estates in southern Russia. The letters of the Baroness to her English friends describe the trials of an unhappy emigre and also the Russian world as ruled by the celebrated empress.

Pendleton, Mark Pierce. Andy Dodge; the history of a scapegrace. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1900. c. 6+255 p. por. D. cl., $1.25.

An American novel by a well-known journalist. It tells with fine realism the scrapes, struggles, and ultimate success of a so-called "wild" youth, who is at the same time able, manly, and American to the backbone. Andy's start in life upon a country paper, and subsequent literary aspirations, are those of actual experience, and equally life-like are the accounts of the State Legislature and editorial office, giving a view of practical politics.

Perry pictures lesson system: two courses of lesson talks on the life of Christ. Malden,

Digitized by Google

Mass., Perry Pictures Co., [1900.] c. Series A, 52 pictures and 52 talks, portfolio, $1; Series B, 12 talks and 12 pictures, portfolio, 30 c.

This picture lesson system, with appropriate lesson talks, has been prepared for supplementary use in Sunday-schools, secular schools, and in the home. The system is in two series. Series A, includes a lesson talk on each one of the fifty-two pictures embraced—a picture and a lesson for each Sunday or week of the year. Series B, includes only twelve pictures and twelve lesson talks. The pictures illustrate the life of Christ or a Christian virtue, and are the reproductions of masterpieces. The "talks" are printed on stiff cards the same size as the pictures, which they explain, pointing out the lesson. All are unbound in a portfolio.

Phillpotts, Eden. Sons of the morning. N. Y., Putnam, 1900. c. 6+492 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

Two "Sons of the morning," men born at the hour of dawn, whom the superstitions of Dartmoor peasants endowed with special gifts, loved the heiress of Bear Down and she loved them both. The plot is brought about by superstitions also. An old blind saint and seer sets the conduct of the three chief actors before them in a way that leads them all to try to do their duty, but Nature, human nature, and circumstance bring about most surprising ending. The author of "Children of the mist" has again written a story of natural people under primitive conditions.

Porter, Charlotte, and Clarke, Helen A. Browning study programmes. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1900.] c. 34+631 p. D. cl., $1.50.

By the editors of Poet Lore. Begins with a general introduction which gives an estimate of Browning's position as a poet. Then the poems are grouped under various chapter headings, such as Poems of Adventure and Heroism, Folk Poems, Phases of Romantic Love, Love Lyrics Grouped, Portraits of Husbands and Wives, Art and the Artist, Music and Musicians, etc. A second series takes up the study of single poems, such as "Paracelsus," "Sordello," "Strafford," "Pippa Passes," and a dozen others. This is followed by portrayals of national life, English, Italian, French, German, Spanish, Russian and Jewish. Then come Autobiographical poems and studies of Browning's Philosophy and Artistry. The chapters are teeming with suggestions, with helpful questions and hints.

Potocka, Countess Anna, [formerly Anna Tyskiewicz.] Memoirs of the Countess Potocka; ed. by Casimir Stryienski; authorized tr. by Lionel Strachey. N. Y., Doubleday & McClure Co., [for sale by Doubleday, Page & Co.,] 1900. c. 22+253 p. il. por. facsim. map O. cl., $3.50.

The writer of these amusing reminiscences was the great-granddaughter of the last king of Poland. Born Anna Tyszkiewicz, she married at twenty-six the Count Potocka. Her life was spent at Warsaw and Paris, meeting many historical personages of Poland, Russia and France. Her early remembrances go back to 1794 to the third partition of Poland, and the incorporation of what was left of that country with the Russian Empire. She died at the age of ninety-one in Paris, her salon there being one of the notable ones of the Second Empire. She met Napoleon in Warsaw and afterwards in Paris, and gives amusing details of the Emperor and his family, Marie Louise, etc. Illustrated by many portraits, views, etc.

This course of lectures was arranged at the Diocesan Convention of 1898 to consider what steps should be taken for the improvement of the Sunday-schools of the Diocese. The basic principle is that the Sunday-school is a school and should keep pace with secular educational methods. Its textbooks and equipments and the training of its teachers should be considered in the light of educational principles.

As is title indicates, this little book does not follow the beaten track of theological exegesis. In the opinion of the writer that theological track is not the same as, or even convergent with, the "path" pointed out by Jesus. "Certain beliefs," therefore, he says, "for which the faintest shadow of support cannot be found in the Bible, and which have not approved themselves to the enlightened conscience of humanity, are not treated as sacred."

The inmates of a typical Welsh farm-house surrounded by well-cultivated fields and fine pasture lands, furnish the characters. Two brothers are contrasted —one seeking a higher education and a better social position, and without scruple in attaining either, the other an impulsive, generous hearted fellow, who runs away from home and ships as a sailor. Later in life they both love the same girl—a waif cast up by the sea. A theft committed and bitterly repented and expiated, illustrates finely the real characters of the actors in the story. By the author of "Mifanwy," etc.

Ray, Anna Chapin. Playground Toni. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1900.] c. 4+136 p. 1 il. D. (Sunshine library.) hf. cl., 50 c.

The scene of the story is the Jewish quarter of a city slums. Some philanthropic young ladies open the play-grounds of school-house number seven. It brings together an unregenerate throng of ragged, unkempt, dirty "kids," and the most unregenerate among them is Toni Valovick. Even Toni has an almost microscopic and deeply hidden touch of chivalry in his heart, though he fights and smokes and drinks and scoffs. His regeneration is the story.

The author has gathered together the teachings of nature, science, and revelation in respect to man as he is in this world, and what is to become of him when he passes beyond its bounds. Though written from a Christian standpoint, the work presents, as fairly as possible, the views of the Hindus, Parsees, and Mohammedans, and gives the claims of Theosophists and Spiritualists respectful attention. Various speculative theories, especially the theory of evolution, have also been carefully considered.

The plan of the book is as follows: The first part is an introduction, and gives a general view of the forces at work, covering the various elements of intellectual and economic life that influence modern politics. The second part treats of what the author considers the true centre of interest in present international politics—namely: the Chinese question: the consequences of the Chinese situation on European politics are traced in part third. The part devoted to German imperial politics presents the well-considered policy of a great empire, while in the last part some considerations upon the position of the United States as a world-power are given. The whole material of the book, is focussed upon the Chinese problem. The documents and works upon which the author bases his conclusions are cited at the end of each part. Author is assistant professor of poltical science in the University of Wisconsin.

"The aim is to help thoughtful readers of the gospels to discern more clearly the features of him whom those writings inimitably portray. It is avowedly a study rather than a story, and as a companion to the reading of the gospels it seeks to answer some of the questions which are raised by a sympathetic consideration of those narratives. These answers are offered in an unargumentative way, even where the questions are still in debate among scholars."—Preface. Appendix contains books of reference on the life of Jesus.

The first edition of this work appeared in 1891; the important manuscript discoveries and critical discussions of the last decade have rendered desirable a revision of the earlier work. The result is this new and enlarged edition. Not only has the introduction been entirely re-written, especial care being taken to present the results of discussions "respecting the authorship, unity, character, object, date and place of composition" of the gospel, but extensive revisions and additions have been made in the main body of the work. New notes have been added, and new maps and illustrations from new photographs.

Risley, R: Voorhees. The sledge. Bost., R: G. Badger & Co., 1900. c. 209 p. S. flex. leath., $1.50.

The first long novel from the author of "Men's tragedies." He explains his title in the following paragraph: "Some men are the blind sledge—they smite. . . . They are force—self-will without direction and without comprehension, the slave of chance, passion, and themselves." His hero is Ivan Varoff, a Russian priest, who had lived till his fortieth year in a small province on the shore of the Baltic. He is a wild, half savage man, knowing little of women, and finding his only happiness in his old 'cello. He allows his lust to destroy the innocence of a gypsy girl, who seeks his protection. His repentance, the girl's revenge are powerfully sketched in short, abrupt sentences.

Roberts, C: G: Douglas. By the marshes of Minas. Bost., Silver, Burdett & Co., [1900.] c. 4+285 p. il. D. cl., $1.25.

A dozen stories, all dealing with that romantic period in Canadian history when the French were making their last struggle to retain their hold upon the peninsula of Acadie—now called Nova Scotia. Each tale is independent of the others, but the scenes are similar. The book is named from those wide sea-meadows and that restless water around which chiefly clusters the romance of Acadian story.

Roberts, C: G: Douglas. The heart of the ancient wood. N. Y., Silver, Burdett & Co., [1900.] c. 4+276 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

A realistic romance of the folk of the forest—a romance of the alliance of peace between a pioneer's daughter in the depths of the ancient wood, and the wild beasts who felt her spell and became her friends. Through this romance runs another, of the eventual human lover whose coming, with the blood of hunting on his hands, is set for the maiden's perplexity, between her love for nature and her love for man. The animals are presented as creatures of motives, likings, intentions, reasonings.

Roberts, Morley. The fugitives. N. Y., McClure, Phillips & Co., 1900. c. 3+315 p. D. cl., $1.

A story of adventure in South Africa during the present Boer war, which includes a graphic description of an escape from Pretoria prison, and a realistic picture of the struggle for existence in the Veldt. Certain members of a prosperous English family, for reasons disclosed in the story, plan the escape of an English captain, who was a prisoner of war; this enterprise is attended with great danger to the fugitives. The ending, however, is surprising.

Roberts, Morley. Lord Linlithgow: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1900. c. 2+319 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Of this novel The Athenaeum says, "It is political. It indulges in the realism which introduces well-known people under thin disguises—Sir Michael Ghore, Mr. Highbury, and the nobleman who gives it a name. It turns upon a donation of £5000 given in 1891 by a Mr. 'Eustace Loder' to Mr. 'John Midhurst' in order to prevent the Liberal party passing a Home Rule Bill which shall exclude Irish representation from Westminster, and to widen the horizon of Liberal politics so as to include the whole empire."

Rohlfs, Mrs. Anna Katharine Green, [Mrs. C: Rohlfs.] The circular study. N. Y., McClure, Phillips & Co., 1900. c. 3+289 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A New York man of moderate fortune is found dead in his study, a circular room from which escape is almost impossible on account of the peculiar electrical devices with which the study is equipped. When found the dead man has a dagger thrust in his heart and a crucifix on his breast. His mode of life and other circumstantial evidence seem not only to prove that suicide was impossible, but also that his servant was innocent. Gryce and Sweetwater, detectives, by their clever methods, discover not only the murderer but the motive for the strange crime.

A German professor, Dr. C: Schoeppfer, in a public lecture in Berlin, here translated into English, maintained the truth of the Tychonian theory, founded on the supposition that the earth stands still in space, that the sun revolves around the earth, and that the planets and other members of our solar system revolve about the sun. "So far from being ridiculed," General De Peyster says, "the facts on which Dr. Schoeppfer based his arguments were felt to be incontrovertible, whatever judgment may be passed upon his conclusions." May be had free on application to Gen. De Peyster.

Miss Scidmore's knowledge of China is due to the fact that she has visited it seven times within the past fifteen years. Several of her eight and twenty chapters are devoted to the capital, Peking; one to the foreign missions; one each to the cities of Tientsin, Canton, and Shanghai, and two to the Great Wall. "The Decadence of the Manchus," the alien ruling family, is the subject of another chapter, while the Dowager Empress, "Tsze Hsi An the Great," is treated of at equal length. An amusing account is given of the Tsung-li Yamun, the group of old men that is nominally responsible for the Empire's foreign policy.

Sixty-seven patriotic poems. While it has been, in the main, the purpose of the editor to include in the present collection only such poems as commemorate some signal act of valor historically verified, it has seemed best to widen the scope sufficiently to admit a few selections that must have been excluded were the lines rigorously drawn. To appeal to the student of American history has been the primary aim.

Henri de Marc, a chevalier of France, was despatched to America on a mission by his king; duty led him to General Washington's headquarters at Tappan, in time to witness the execution, as a spy, of the unfortunate Major Andre. Following close upon his arrival in America he is called upon to draw arms in behalf of the heroine of the tale. Following the drift of the latter years of the war, the scene shifts to the swamps and mountain fastnesses of the south: the battle-ground of Marion's men, Tarleton's legions and the struggle between the forces of General Greene and Lord Cornwallis, which ended with the laying down of the British arms at Yorktown.

Sears, Edmund Hamilton. An outline of political growth in the nineteenth century. N. Y., Macmillan, 1900. c. 13+616 p. O. cl., $3.

Written with a view of covering the entire political field and giving a succinct account of every nation which is, even supposedly, under popular government. Spanish-America receives attention as well as Europe, and even such pseudo republics as Hayti, San Domingo, and Liberia are not unnoticed. To Japan considerable space has been allotted, because of the remarkable character of the recent political developments. The work shows with considerable detail the course of political events the world over for a hundred years; and at the same its treatment is so far philosophical that it will help the reader to understand whether or not democratic insitutions are proving themselves a failure. Includes a bibliography (21 p.) classed under countries and general works and works of reference. Index. Author is principal of Mary Institute, St. Louis.

George Selwyn is one of the historical names of the eighteenth century. The letters which he received have afforded frequent and valuable material to the student of the reign of George the Third. While Selwyn was regarded as the first humorist of his time, little was known about him, for scarcely any letters which he wrote had until recently been found. This discovery of about two hundred letters from his untiring pen has been preserved at Castle Howard and is known as the Castle Howard letters. A selection has been made from them for this volume. The editors have given those which appeared most interesting and representative; have placed them in definite groups, supplementing them with a narrative, remarks and notes, enabling the whole to present the life of Selwyn, and also a picture of the age in which he lived.

This volume of Shakespeare is the first of the works of the dramatist to be edited for young people by Sarah Willard Hiestand; it is also the initial number of Heath's "Home and school classics," which embraces "Story school classics for children," and "Young readers classics." The "Home and school classics" contains already a number of books chosen from the world's classics; it will be added to in the future regularly. As a rule the books will be printed entire; where expurgation may be required it will be done with as little change or omission as possible. Each book contains or will contain a brief account of its author, and of the noteworthy facts in connection with the work itself. See other titles in scenes under Young, Mulock, Goldsmith, Hamerton, Browne.

Shaw, G: Bernard. An unsocial socialist. N. Y., Brentano's, 1900. 3+373 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The "socialist" who is "unsocial" bears the name of Sidney Trefusis. He is a young Englishman who has inherited a great fortune from his father made in trade. The young man thinks this fortune not honestly obtained, as he condemns as dishonest the methods by which it was gathered together. He has remarkable theories about life and living and other things which he endeavors to carry out, by assuming the garb of a workingman and living his life. The story is merely the medium of the writer's socialistic theories, which are often presented so grotesquely, that one is left in doubt whether the book is a travesty of socialism or not.

Shaw, T: Forage crops other than grasses; how to cultivate, harvest, and use them. N. Y., Orange Judd Co., 1900. c. '99. 5+287 p. D. cl., $1.

Under the term, "Forage crops," as used by the author, are comprised all pasture plants which are sown from year to year—and which are fed off by the animals in the field. How easily and satisfactorily forage plants can be made to supplement perennial pastures, how profitably they can be raised on land which otherwise would be idle, and how important a place they are destined to occupy in the near future in systematic crop rotation on every stock and dairy farm, has been the author's aim in writing this book. Author is professor of animal husbandry at the University of Minnesota.

The book is divided into two parts, the first of which treats of the growing and feeding of all kinds of soiling crops that have been found useful in any part of the United States or Canada. The second part discusses the silo. It is not a plea for the silo, but a sensible discussion of the place for the silo, the benefits from soiling crops, the best methods of building the silo, the crops that are suitable for soiling, filling the silo and feeding the silage.

The house described was in that part of the old town of Stratford, Conn., which was formerly called Ripton, now Huntington. The book shows the manner of life among persons of the better class in the country districts of New England. While excluding the well-worn records of spinning-bees, huskings, apple-parings, etc., the author has shown many less known phases and numerous odd customs of country living at that period, presenting a realistic picture of 18th century life.

Shepard, Ja. Governor William Bradford and his son, Major William Bradford. New Britain, Ct., Ja. Shepard, 1900. c. 5-103 p. il. O. cl., $2.

A contribution to the pilgrim history of New England, confined strictly to Bradford's part therein. Extensive quotations from historical sources are arranged with original matter to form a continuous story. Beginning with a sketch of Bradford's birthplace, the author follows him through his boyhood days and gives incidents of his sojourn in Holland, with a description of his voyage to the New World, and an account of the founding of Plymouth Colony. Genealogy.

A study of the political, social, and industrial environments of the Philippine Islands, with a careful investigation of American policy in governing and holding the Islands, also of the individual action of General Otis. The author says "before we sailed for Manila I had no intention of criticising either American policy or American discipline . . . my sympathies were entirely American as they are to-day." The voyage was made in the United States dispatch boat Zafiro. The work is virtually an appeal to the citizens of the United States and an effort to espouse the cause of the Filipinos whom the author believes to be a misrepresented people.

The close of the fourteenth century, during the reign of Vladislav v. of Poland, is the time of the story. The German Knights of the Cross are the disturbing element, their cruel treatment of the Poles leading to the war of 1447. There is a young hero named Zbyshko, who vows to give his lady three peacock's plumes from the crests of Germans; he asails a Knight of the Cross whom he sees wearing this decoration and is at once plunged into difficulties and stirring adventures The book leaves the story unfinished, a second part being forthcoming. This book was translated at Warsaw, under the eyes of the author, and the difficult task has been performed to his entire satisfaction.

Stephen Alison, a ticket-of-leave man, whose sentence was scarcely the result of his own crime, is anxious to lead a new life. To sever himself from his old associates is not so easy to accomplish, and gradually he falls into bad company again. He enters into a plot with some old confederates to accompany a dissipated young nobleman abroad, with the intention of killing him, and then claiming the insurance money, which the sharpers have already got the victim to assign to them. A succession of sensational events suddenly happen, the scene remaining in London.

Made on the same plan as the author's "Turrets, Towers, and Temples." She has tried, she says, "to produce a work that will fulfil the purposes of an artistic guide-book." . . . "I have selected most of the important buildings and monuments of Paris, and have chosen the most interesting descriptions that I could find by various authors, English and French, who love and admire the objects of which they write." Victor Hugo, Prosper Merimee, Louis Blanc, Louis Enault, Arsene Houssaye, and Philip Gilbert Hamerton are among the writers whose views are presented.

Singleton, Esther, ed. Wonders of nature as seen and described by famous writers; ed. and tr. by Esther Singleton. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1900. c. 12+366 p. il. O. cl., $2.

In Miss Singleton's former collections of objects of interest to the tourist, she has confined herself to masterpieces of painting and architecture. The success of these books—"Turrets, towers and temples" and "Great pictures"—has encouraged her to carry the idea still further and make a compilation of pleasurable and striking impressions produced upon thoughtful travellers by a contemplation of the wonders of nature. She has confined herself to the description of the grand, the curious, and the awe-inspiring in nature, leaving the beauties of landscape for future treatment.

Sisson, S. Eliz. Richard Newcomb. N. Y., Eaton & Mains, 1900. c. 2-321 p. D. (Epworth League reading course, 1900-1901.) cl., set of 4 v., net, $2.

The story opens in the "forties" with an account of a double wedding in a little New England village. The two young couples go immediately west and make homes in Illinois. Frontier life of that period is then described, with special phases of camp-meetings, etc. Richard Newcomb is the eldest son of one of the married couples. His life is followed to its close, showing the bad influence of his early home training.

A personal narrative of the sailor of the sloop Spray on her "single-handed" voyage of 46,000 miles around the globe. Among the many interesting episodes are Captain Slocum's escape from pirates off the coast of Africa, his fight with the savages of Tierra del Fuego, his visit to Robinson Crusoe's island, his running before the wind for weeks without steering, his speaking of the battleship Oregon on her record-breaking run, and—timeliest if not most entertaining of all—his interview with President Kruger at Pretoria. Wrote previously "The voyage of the Liberdade." This narrative first ran through The Century.

Slosson, Annie Trumbull. Story-Tell Lib. N. Y., Scribner, 1900. c. 3+79 p. S. cl., 50 c.

"Story-Tell Lib" was the nickname the villagers gave to a little lame girl, who had a wonderful gift of story-telling. The author tells how she met her, and gives some of the little stories, fables, parables, or allegories which she heard "Story-Tell Lib" relate.

Presents an attractive treatment of the every-day life of the married woman of to-day. Begins with the taking of the house that is to be the home, the getting it to rights, the furnishing it, with a word about plumbers and electricians, etc. Other chapters are: An impressionist dream; My Shakespeare calendar; At my writing-table; A glimpse of spring; Max's dictionaries; At the zoo; My Persian cat, etc.

Smith, Arthur Cosslett. The monk and the dancer. N. Y., Scribner, 1900. c. 5+241 p. D. bds., $1.50.

"The monk and the dancer" has its scene chiefly at the Abbey of La Trappe at Staoneli, although for a time it changes to Paris. The hero is a young monk who has never spoken to a woman until he meets the Spanish dancer Dolores who visits the Abbey. The fatal influence she has upon his life is the story. There are five other stories, viz.: "Trot, trot to market," "The peach," "The senior reader," "Some old families," and "The eye of the harem."

The heroine is about sixteen, a bright, intelligent girl, who when the story opens has just won a scholarship worth forty pounds a year. Her father is seriously ill, and needs the services of a great specialist, whom they feel too poor to call in. Clarissa and her little sister Janet plot to obtain the great man's services, pledging the money of her scholarship, and succeeding finally in saving her father's life.

In the garret of the Smith homestead at Sharon, Conn., built in 1765, Miss Smith has had access to thousands of family letters, going back some two hundred years, and it is mainly from this source that she has reconstructed the family life of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, especially in New England. But she is related not only to the representative families of New England, but also to the best-known of the old Dutch and some of the Huguenot families of New York, and several of her most interesting chapters describe early conditions in New York and New Rochelle, and in the manor-houses along the Hudson River.

This story gives the aftermath of King Philip's war in the Connecticut Valley, relating the experiences and adventures of twenty captives, largely young children carried away by the Indians in 1677 from Hatfield and Deerfield to Canada, and the efforts of Wait and Jennings to rescue them. This volume concludes the Young Puritan Series.

Smith, Minna Caroline. Mary Paget: a romance of old Bermuda. N. Y., Macmillan, 1900. c. 6+326 p. map, D. cl., $1.50.
The time is the reign of James I. of England; the historic frame to the story is the shipwreck of the Sea Venture, which inspired Shakespeare with his theme for "The Tempest." Mary Paget is a beautiful girl whose love story in the isolation of "the still vexed Bermoothes" is complicated by the struggle there between the Established Church and Puritanism.

Smith, Orlando Jay. The coming democracy. N. Y., Brandur Co., [1900.] c. 3+162 p. D. cl., $1; pap., 50 c.
The author does not believe ours is a real democracy and thinks that the constitution is cumbersome and does not carry out the will of the people, and that too much power has been absorbed by the President. Other criticisms are made showing the source of many of our corruptions in politics. In place of the present systems of elections, he proposes the Free Man's ballot—"one vote for one cause and for one candidate." With explanations of this and other reforms is a glowing picture of the future democracy.

The motive of this novel is divorce. "Judge Ladd" marries, and his wife loses her mind. He finds she comes from a family in which insanity is hereditary. The physicians pronounce her case hopeless, and advise him to put her in an asylum. He then falls in love with Ada Gordon, gets a divorce in Montana, and marries Ada. Whether he should have obtained a divorce, or should have remained faithful to his insane wife, is discussed through many chapters. The scene is laid in Virginia.

"The aim of this little book is to interpret and systematize Tennyson's thoughts on God, freedom, and immortality. Great care has been taken not to force the interpretation in any manner, but to determine as nearly as possible just what the poet thought on these 'inevitable questions.' . . . The interpretation has, of course, been made in the light of Tennyson's relations to the spirit of his age."—Preface. Author is professor of philosophy in Yale University.

"While the writer has avoided Tyerman's method of strict chronological order—excellent though it is for some purposes—as involving broken lights and insecure perspective, he has striven to mark the stages of Methodist evolution by treating in successive chapters characteristics of the movement, as they assumed exceptional importance at successive periods of Wesley's life." Preface.

"My purpose is to show Froebel the educator, and specially the founder of the kindergarten," says Mr. Snider. "But at the same time," he further says, "I shall try to reveal Froebel the man, in all his strength and weakness—an ideal soul of transcendent insight and consecration in a noble cause, yet burdened with his full share of foibles, follies, wrongs, and even sins. Only thus can I bring to light his truly human greatness, which must be seen in his rising above his own limits."

It is undeniable that on a number of questions—such as the inspiration of the Scriptures, God's universal Fatherhood, the Atonement, the second coming of Christ—the belief of the best modern theologians differs materially from the formal declarations in the standards of the churches. To these and kindred subjects our author has devoted extensive reading and careful study; he now presents the results in compact and readable form, and in language at once clear and terse. The book is written for thinking men and women, not for the theological scholar.

Mr. Binks was a rich dairyman and he and his wife were characters. Their daughter married Tom Knipp, who knew nothing of his origin. His father-in-law was satisfied, but his sister-in-law was not, and the efforts of the wife to give her husband a standing in the family lead to surprising results. The conversations show the old skill of the author of "Bootles' baby."

The story of Angelique Hodsworth, a pretty, ambitious girl who goes from quiet Beech Croft to London to study for the stage. She seems to have no sense of the value of money, and this is at the bottom of all her troubles. She fails to make her mark on the stage, gets deeply into debt, marries a little Jew, Isaac Isaacs, to cancel her indebtedness, discovers in a little while that he is untrue to her, gets a divorce, marries again, this time Sir John Berkeley, a famous artist. Her extravagance wrecks her second married life.

Gives a graphic account of a scheming English widow's manœuvres to get husbands for three penniless girls. The youngest and the beauty helps a duke's son to propose. Her efforts to make herself a place among countesses by birth make the story. She follows various fads and charitable schemes and finally strikes something original.

Steel, Mrs. Flora Annie. The hosts of the Lord. N. Y., Macmillan, 1900. c. '99, 1900. 7+344 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The hosts of the Lord are the natives of India who make a yearly pilgrimage to the Cradle of the gods. The author gives a remarkable picture of the various religious customs of India, the lives of the Christian missionaries, one of whom is the heroine of the unvarnished tale of the problems confronting England in India. The hero is a native soldier serving in the English army. His feelings as a native and his discipline as a soldier give the author opportunity for reflections upon the miracle that keeps the innumerable hosts subject to a handful of English rulers.

Steel, Mrs. Flora Annie. Voices in the night: a chromatic fantasia. N. Y., Macmillan, 1900. c. 8+418 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A story of the India of to-day with its scene at Nushapore; the characters are the Lieutenant Governor Sir George Arbuthnot and his wife Lady Arbuthnot, their little six-year-old son, Gerald, his governess, Lesley Drummond, and an Englishman, Jack Raymond, once in love with Lady Arbuthnot, and a high cast native married to an English woman. Love and politics are the themes; under all is an ominous muttering of discontent and threatened revolution.

Stephens, Rob. Neilson. Philip Winwood; il. by E. W. D. Hamilton. Bost., L. C. Page & Co., 1900. c. 5-412 p. D. cl., $1.50.

This novel has the following sub-title explaining its purpose: "A sketch of the domestic history of an American captain in the War of Independence; embracing events that occurred between and during the years 1763 and 1786, in New York and London: written by his enemy in war, Herbert Russell, lieutenant in the Loyalist forces, and told anew by Rob. The action of the story begins when New York was a little city of less than 5000 inhabitants. The conflict between the law-abiding citizens, led by the Governor, Earl Bellamont, and the merchants, headed by Patroon Van Volkenberg, is at its height. The Governor has forbidden the port to the free-traders or pirate ships, which infested the Atlantic and sailed boldly under their own flag; while the Patroon and his merchant colleagues not only traded openly with the buccaneers, but owned and managed such illicit craft. The illustrations by C. M. Relyea are in colors.

Stevens, G: Barker, D.D. Messages of Paul; arr. in historical order, analyzed and freely rendered in paraphrase, with introds. N. Y., Scribner, 1900. c. 13+268 p. sq. S. (Messages of the Bible.) cl., net, $1.25.

Comprises a paraphrase of the first ten epistles of Paul, arranged in their probable chronological order, with brief introductions and analyses. The body of the text is reproduced, with some revision, from the author's "Epistles of Paul in modern English," published in 1898. It is believed that the explanations given of the time, place, and occasion of each letter and the indications respecting the contents and movement of thought in each, will materially increase the convenience and usefulness of the work.

Stevens, G: Barker, D.D. Messages of the Apostles. N. Y., Scribner, 1900. c. 13+258 p. sq. S. (Messages of the Bible.) cl., $1.

The apostolic discourses in the Book of Acts and the general and pastoral epistles of the New Testament arranged in chronological order, analyzed, and freely rendered in paraphrase. The general facts which one should know in order to appreciate the writings comprised in the volume are stated in the introduction. This is followed by an account of the conditions and problems of the early church which, it is hoped, will throw light upon the messages of the Apostles, especially upon the apostolic discourses. To each epistle is prefixed a brief special introduction explaining the nature and aim of the book.

The three Russell brothers, Larry, Walter, and Ben, have been the heroes of all the volumes of this series. In this volume Larry and Ben particularly figure in two important expeditions of that gallant soldier, General Henry W. Lawton, the first directed against Santa Cruz on the Laguna de Bay, and the second from Manila to San Isidro through one hundred and fifty miles of jungle. The author has aimed to be historically correct, while giving a good story.

This novel has in ten years gone through forty-five editions in Germany. It is particularly adapted for reading with both younger and older students studying German, being thoroughly modern in the best sense of the word. To make the text available for general class-room use, it has been deemed best to cut out one rather long episode. In putting together the notes the aim has been to facilitate rapid, though idiomatic, translation. Hence some attention has been given to the particles.

The profession of chemical engineer is a recent one in this country, and there are very few who lay claim to the title. It means the person wearing it shall be proficient in two distinct professions—he must be a chemist as well as a mechanical engineer. The author points out the importance of teaching chemical engineering in our universities and the requirements of those who would make it a profession.

Swift, B:, [pseud. for W: R. Paterson.] Dartnell: a bizarre incident. N. Y., H. S. Stone & Co., 1900. 2+186 p. D. bds., $1.25.

Sir Charles Dartnell, the last of his refined and fastidious race, lived in London to make studies of the passions of life for his almost completed book on "The dooms of love." He married a gay young girl and immediately began to teach her to develop the spiritual side of her nature by subduing all natural impulse. His aversion to noise amounted to insanity, and she was kept from the piano and from song and amusement of all kinds. How his own experience furnished a new chapter for "The dooms of love" is told by the author of "The destroyer."

This volume and the one on "John Knox" which follows, are the successors of "Charlotte Bronte" and "William Cowper," by the same writer. They come put up together in a neat box, but may be bought separately. They are studies of the home life of two celebrities, written in a popular style, interspersed with many anecdotes. Hannah More, an English religious writer, was born in 1745, died in 1833. John Knox, the great Scottish reformer, statesman and writer, was born in 1505 and died in 1572.

"The Thomas book" was first published in 1896, but just after it was ready the firm publishing it failed, and only a few copies were distributed and those by subscription. It contains distinct pedigrees of 60 Thomas families and over 100 other names, each one arranged as a continuous history. Among special features will be found the history and ancestry of the celebrated Sir Rhys Ap Thomas, K. G., of Wales; many pedigrees of English Barons, from whom the American families descend, a biographical dictionary of 500 persons of the name of Thomas (not included in the pedigrees) many of them early emigrants to America, a very full list of those who held commissions or were privates in the American Revolution, a collection of Virginia Colonial land grants with notes by R. A. Brock; an account of the origin of steam railroads in America, a unique ecclesiastical genealogy of the author, and incidentally the disproval of many genealogical fables, e.g., the true English ancestry of the well-known Lawrence family is given for the first time.

Thompson, Ernest Evan Seton-. Wild animal play for children; with alternate reading for very young children. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., [1900.] c. 5-79 p. il. D. cl., 50 c.
A little drama for children, which brings in the animals of Mr. Thompson's books—the mustang, Redruff, Lobo, the foxes, and all the other "critters" who have become personal friends. Supplementary music has been added that children can easily be taught to sing.

Thompson, Mrs. Grace Gallatin Seton-. A woman tenderfoot. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., [1900.] c. unp. il. D. cl., $2.
Mrs. Seton-Thompson has been the companion of her husband, the famous artist-author, in so many of his expeditions that she is amply able to present the woman's side of the trip during which he gathered the material for his "Wild animals I have known." and other books. In addition to this attractive out-door flavor the book contains specific advice on the subject of camping dress and outfit for women. The bookmaking of the volume is unusually attractive and the many marginal drawings and full-page pictures add greatly to the interest.

Thompson, Rev. S. C. Mental index of the Bible and a cosmic use of association. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls Co., 1900. c. 280 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The work constitutes a complete memory system prepared specially to help in the remembering and appreciation of the Bible's contents. The fundamental principle of all reliable memory systems, that natural memory depends upon the association of ideas, has been applied to the Bible. The practical application of this idea is that a verse, text, incident, name, or chapter which may not be easily remembered, must be associated in the mind with something easily remembered.

Thurston, H: W. Economics and industrial history for secondary schools. Chic., Scott, Foresman & Co., 1899. c. 4-300 p. D. cl., $1.

It is the author's belief that a beginner in economics has a right to find the subject closely related to his own experience and that of his neighbors, so that he would seem to himself to be studying the industrial life of actual men and women more than books about this industrial life. This manual is the result of the author's effort to put into practice in his own classes the idea just stated. It includes an observational study of some of the data of economics, the consideration of a few facts of industrial history, and an elementary discussion of some of the most fundamental economic principles. A fortune, to which there are several claimants, is the chief theme. The heroine is a young girl reared with the loftiest ideals, who finds, when brought into contact with the world, that its motives and standards are in direct contradiction to her own. The development of her character under the influence of love, sorrow, and disappointment forms the basis of an interesting psychological study. Glimpses of the better side of Bohemian life in Paris, and of American society, lend color to the narrative.

In this novel Count Tolstoi clearly states his philosophy of life. He lays the blame of the sins of the world chiefly upon existing forms of government and ecclesiastical authority. His heroine is introduced coming from prison to trial accused of the murder of a lover. Her story is told with startling realism. The hero who had been the first cause of the heroine's sinful life realizes his responsibilities and devotes his life to his fellowmen. Russian conditions are faithfully described. The book contains a facsimile signiture of Tolstoi authorizing this edition of his book.

Tolstoi, Count Lyoff Nicholaievich. The slavery of our times. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1900. 31+186 p. por. S. cl., $1.25.

Treats of modern industrialism. The author claims that slavery exists among us and traces its cause; declares that the public is indifferent to the ruin of men's lives, and that science exonerates the existing system; shows why political economists maintain an untruth, and points out the inconsistency of the socialistic ideal.

While many stories of the revolution relate the acts of the leaders, this describes the life of the people. The incidents are almost without an exception true. The experiences of the prisoner on the old Jersey prison-ship are based on the personal recollections of a man who was long confined there.

The hero, Marcantonio Giustiniani, a young grandee of the City of the Sea, marries the daughter of a wealthy glassworker, and causes her name to be inscribed in the Libro d'Oro, which records only the noble families of the Republic. She is devoted to her husband, but in the famous quarrel between Paul the Pope and Paul the Friar, over a question of papal prerogative, her sympathies are with the papacy as against the Republic and its representative, on whose side her husband and his family are arrayed. Characters of historic interest, such as Fra Paolo and Paul Veronese, play conspicuous parts in the unfolding of the plot. There are also fine descriptions of Venice.

The author has made his heroine a descendant of one of Hawaii's legendary characters known as "Kelea, the surf-rider." She is a physically powerful, savagely passionate, but noble-minded young woman, inheriting the skill and the name of her ancestress. The contrast between this typical young barbarian and a tender, sweet-spirited maiden called Pu' Aloha (Flower of Love), as rivals for the affections of Hookama, adopted son of another chief, forms the theme of the story. The adventures of Hookama, as he is sent on a dangerous mission to one of the other islands by his jealous foster-father—adventures of wild bird-catching, shark-fighting, volcano-exploring, personal conflict, war, imprisonment, ocean perils, and much else—keep the reader on the alert.

United States catalog: books in print, 1899; ed. by G: Flavel Danforth and Marion E. Potter. Minneapolis, H. W. Wilson, [1900.] c. 7+755+361 p. Q. cl., $12.50;

This work is the result of two independent compilations, and is sold in one or two volumes. The members of the "Cumulative Index" staff under Marion E. Potter are the original compilers of the first part or "Author index," while Mr. G: F. Danforth, librarian of the state University of Indiana, Bloomington, Indiana, is the compiler of the second part or "Title index," the one supplementing the other, and having been carefully compared by both editors. The "Author index" of 755 pages gives in one alphabet, under author, or title where the book is anonymous, the books in print of over 450 well-known publishing houses, besides the books of about 1500 occasional publishers and printers. In the author entry, price, edition and publisher are given—there are also brief series entries and ample references. These details are omitted in the "Title index," so called. A directory of publishers covers fifteen pages, and there is a classified index to the advertising pages included in the volume.

The collection of "materials" here offered is the direct result of class-room experience and experiment. In selecting stories that were to form the basis of conversation between teacher and pupil, it was felt that they should first be interesting in themselves; that they should readily lend themselves to reproduction on the part of the pupil, and the vocabulary should be representative of the real world, rather than that of thought and feeling. Description and all detailed setting have been eliminated in favor of action and incident. The editor has also aimed at introducing the pupil to only a limited German vocabulary.

Voss, R: Nubia of Saracenesco: the romance of an artist and a Sabine maiden; from the German by Hattie E. Miller. Akron, O., Saalfield Pub. Co., 1900. 3-152 p. S. cl., 50 c.
This story was written in 1889. The time is the beginning of the present century. A young artist travelling through Tivoli to the Adriatic met a beautiful Sabine maiden who learns to love him too well while he painted her as Mary Magdalene before her fall. The plot rests upon the legend that no Sabine maiden had ever been a painter's model.

Voss, R: Sigurd Eckdal's bride: a romance of the far North; tr. [from the German] by Mary J. Safford; il. by F. E. Schoonover. Bost., Little, Brown & Co., 1900. c. 4+235 p. D. cl., $1.50.
The scene is laid in Scandinavia, the winters among the snowdrifts and the icy atmosphere of the mountain solitudes being described with great skill. Sigurd Eckdal and his friend start together on an Arctic expedition in search of the North Pole, the story being full of incident and adventure.

Walloth, Wilhelm. Empress Octavia: a romance of the reign of Nero; from the German by Mary J. Safford. Bost., Little, Brown & Co., 1900. c. 3+378 p. D. cl., $1.50.
In this historical romance, the pure, sweet, simple nature of a young Greek sculptor and the virtue and dignity of Nero's wife, the Empress Octavia, are contrasted with the vice of the age and the artificialities of the courtiers who surrounded Nero. The story opens with a scene in the Neronian Circus, and there is some of the contrast between the pagan and the Christian world of the time.

Ward, Mrs. Mary Augusta, [Mrs. T: Humphry Ward.] Eleanor: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1900. c. 4+627 p. il. D. cl., $1.50; il. 2 v. ed., $3.

A villa overlooking Rome is for the most part the scene of the story. The characters are Eleanor Burgoyne, a young widow, with a tragical past, who has a mortal disease, a beautiful American girl, Lucy Foster, and Edward Manisty, a middle-aged Englishman prominent in letters and politics. It is Mr. Manisty and his aunt who have rented the villa, the other two are visitors. The book is a most elaborate and subtle study of character, as shown in the three principal persons relations with each other. The narrative embraces many exquisite descriptions of Italian scenery.

Way (The) preachers pray; with notes by one of them. Minneapolis, Minn., W: G. Smith & Co., [1900.] c. 103 p. sq. T. bds., 50 c.; artistic, 75 c.; pap., 25 c.

Desiring to know if the prayers of representative preachers kept pace as their sermons did with the advance in science, the editor (whose name is not given) secured verbatim reports of the prayers of ten clergymen in seven different cities, many of them of national reputation, and representing the following denominations: Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregationalist, Universalist, Disciples of Christ, and Independent. These prayers were submitted to the eleventh pastor, who was ignorant of the different names, who was to act as commentator. The prayers with the criticisms are given in his little book. The book opens with an essay by the editor, "Prayer in the light of modern thought."

Traces the way John was led to and then by Christ. We see St. John first as a boy amidst Jewish surroundings watching for the Messiah, then after the coming of Christ rejoicing in his presence, and finally in rendering love and faithful service. We also see Christ as He is supposed to have appeared to St. John. Christ and St. John are the central figures.

Wellington, Courtney. Congressman Hardie: a born democrat. N. Y., G: W. Dillingham Co., [1900.] c. 2-240 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A political novel. The book opens with a political speech made by Hardie, then a candidate for Congress, at a country barbecue. A romantic adventure begins at the close of his speech, when Hardie discovers in a sad-eyed girl, a character which influences his whole life and career from that time. The life of this girl Bena, after he is elected to Congress, and she goes to New York to earn a living, contains some most original features, notably, a speech she delivered before a ladies' club which made her famous in a night.

Wells, D: Dwight. His lordship's leopard: a truthful narration of some impossible facts. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1900. c. 6+301 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The hero, the son of an English bishop, had migrated to America in 1898 for the sake of pushing his sensational novel entitled "The purple kangaroo." While idly roaming in the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York City, he hears some Spanish conspirators take his title for their password. He bribes some impecunious young actors to make a market for his book. This leads to complications that finally bring a most heterogeneous crowd of people to the bishop's palace in England. A young actress is "his Lordship's leopard," her name being a play on words relating to her favored suitor.

White, Hervey. Quicksand. Bost., Small, Maynard & Co., 1900. c. 4+328 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A novel which is virtually a study of character and an illustration of the influence of environment. It is not only the story of an individual but the history also of a family. The central figure is a boy who was reared by his grandparents and kept in ignorance of the tragedy of his mother's death and the mystery of his own birth. In the struggle of this youth for recognition as a writer, a faithful hired man, a quiet father, and an energetic mother play important parts.

Whitehead, R: H., M.D. Anatomy of the brain: text-book for medical students. Phil., F. A. Davis Co., 1900. c. 4+96 p. O. cl., net, $1.

The author's aim has been to furnish medical students with a clear, accurate, and concise account of the anatomy of the brain, to be used as a guide in their study of that organ. It has been thought best to omit minor details, and to exclude, so far as possible, subjects which are still matters of controversy; use has been made of the Latin terms adopted and recommended by the German Anatomical Society at its meeting in Basel, to the extent that they have been inserted, parenthetically, after the names commonly employed in this country.

Whitehouse, H. Remsen. Collapse of the kingdom of Naples. N. Y., Bonnell, Silver & Co., 1899. c. 6+372 p. il. pors. D. cl., $1.50.

A consecutive narrative of the various national and international causes, political as well as social, which contributed to the collapse of the kingdom of the Two Sicilies. The characters of the two last despots of Naples, Ferdinand II. and his son, Francis II., are carefully drawn. Anecdote and gossip enliven the narrative. Mr. Whitehouse is late of the U. S. Diplomatic Service, and author of "Life of Amadeus of Savoy."

Whiteing, R: Paris of to-day; with pictures by André Castaigne. N. Y., Century Co., 1900. c. 9+249 p. Q. cl., $5.

This book on the city of Paris is by the author of "No. 5 John Street" and "The Island." The subdivisions treat of "The government machine," "Paris of the Faubourgs," and "Fashionable Paris." In the last the author reports an interview with the late M. Worth on the starting of fashions under the Empire and in the time of the Republic. Other chapters deal with "Parisian pastimes," "The life of the boulevards," and "Artistic Paris."

Whitman, Walt. Leaves of grass; including a fac-simile autobiography, variorum readings of the poems, and a department of gathered leaves. Phil., D: McKay, [1900.] c. 496 p. por. O. cl., $1.25.

This new edition of "Leaves of grass" presents many new features. Mr. D: McKay, Mr. Whitman's friend and publisher, is the editor. The early editions of the work are now almost entirely out of the market. Perhaps no author was more given to change than Walt Whitman. Many of his poems or parts of poems have been either altered or discarded for a time to appear in a new form in later editions; and not a few have disappeared entirely. The accepted readings are given in this edition in the text, the various changes appearing in footnotes. Under "Gathered leaves" are collected such poems as have been dropped by the way, some of which appeared in only one and others in several past editions.

Whitney, Mrs. Adeline Dutton Train. The integrity of Christian science. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1900. c. 4+151 p. cl., $1.

Mrs. Whitney offers what she regards as a much needed corrective to some of the mistakes of Christian Science, as at present taught, and at the same time a presentation of broader understanding and acceptance of its essential truth. Her work has five chapters, or divisions of the subject: The round world, and they that dwell therein; Our reasonable service; The strength that strengtheneth; Rest; and

Wilkin, Anthony. Among the Berbers of Algeria. N. Y., Cassell, [1900.] 15+263 p. il. map, O. cl., $4

A popular record of a journey undertaken with scientific objects among the two great Berber tribes of modern Algeria, the Chawai and Habyles. The author says, "It was to trace if possible their (the Berbers) connection with the most ancient races of Egypt by the methods of anthropology, by collections of pottery, of designs, of physical measurements, and by observation of their ancestors, that we left Dr. Flinders Petrie's camp in Upper Egypt, and after two uneventful voyages across the turbulent waters of the Mediterranean landed at the end of March in Algiers." The illustrations are all from the author's photographs.

Wilkins, Mary Eleanor. The heart's highway: a romance of Virginia in the seventeenth century. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1900. c. 4+308 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A story of Virginia, beginning in the year 1682; the hero is a convict of a good English family, who is tutor to the heroine, pretty Mistress Mary Cavendish. The scene is laid just after Bacon's Rebellion, a dramatic incident being the destruction of the young tobacco crop to elude the navigation act.

Winship, Albert E: Jukes-Edwards: a study in education and heredity. Harrisburg, Pa., R. L. Myers & Co., 1900. c. 88 p. S. cl., 50 c.; pap., 25 c.

A comparison of a typical family of degenerates of whom R. A. Dugdale made a study under the name of "The Jukes," with the descendants of Jonathan Edwards of New England colonial fame. The aim is to illustrate the results in the very opposite extremes of vice and ignorance and nobility of character and culture. The long line of professional men descending from the great Jonathan Edwards, is a fine offset to the incapables of the "Jukes" family. Incidentally there is a defence of Aaron Burr, who was a descendant through his mother's side of Jonathan Edwards.

The volume opens with what will be considered the standard biography of the greatest Jewish leader in the United States. It has been written by the editors of the book, the Rev. Dr. David Philipson and Louis Grossmann. They were both pupils of Dr. Wise, and were most intimately associated with him, not only during their college career, but also later as colleagues in the city of Cincinnati. The book is published under the auspices of the Alumnal Association of the Hebrew Union College. The selections from the writings of the illustrious rabbi, which form the bulk of the book, express the characteristic thoughts and opinions of the man who stood in the very forefront of American Jewish life for over half a century.

Lectures delivered to students in the Gettysburg Theological Seminary, by Dr. Wolf, the professor of New Testament exegesis and church history. He says of them in his preface: "Persuaded of the manifold advantages of the Christian Year to the Ministry of the Word, and acquainted with the scientific and edifying value of Nebe's Evangelischen Perikopen, it occurred to me what a series of lectures based upon this great work would present to my students a profitable variation from the usual exegetical methods."

Wolf, Emma. Heirs of yesterday. Chic., A. C. McClurg & Co., 1900. c. 4-287 p. S. cl., $1.

The "heirs of yesterday" are the Jews. The story of a talented, cultured young Jewish surgeon who prefers to cast his lot socially with Gentiles rather than Jews. This decision is finally broken down by force of inheritance and tradition, Gentile prejudice and Jewish exclusiveness and especially by the fine ideality of a young Jewess. The scene is San Francisco just before the Spanish-American war. A plea for the study of the spiritual significance underlying all religions, and a fair statement of the strength and weakness of the Jewish and Christian characteristics.

Woman: can she reason? The famous "Cynic" correspondence in the New York Times Saturday Review of books and art. N. Y., New York Times, 1899. c. 122 p. D. pap., 25 c.

On February 25, 1899, "Helen Church," a reader of the New York Times Saturday Review, had in its columns a letter to the editor praising social gatherings—especially those having literary aims. Two weeks later was printed a letter from another reader signed "Cynic," radical in its views to the verge of negation and all aglow with misogyny. It brought out letters from indignant women from all over the country, to which "Cynic" gave a second letter. After this there were still more, all on the subject "Can woman reason?" The correspondence is given here in its entirety.

Zola, Emile. Fruitfulness [Fécondité]; tr. and ed. by Ernest Alfred Vizetelly. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1900. 9+487 p. O. cl., $2.

A novel setting forth the law of fruitfulness as the great law of life—the fruitfulness of the soil, the fruitfulness of human kind. The romance is a great study of human society—French society in particular—to show the duty, the necessity, and the beauty of large families, and the fatal effects to the state and to the individual of the suppression of the first law of life. It is the first of a series of four works in which Zola proposes to embody what he considers to be the four cardinal principles of human life. The others will be called "Work," "Truth," and "Justice."

Altsheler, Jos. Alex. The wilderness road: a romance of St. Clair's defeat and Wayne's victory. N. Y., Appleton, 1901. c. 5+379 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Mr. Altsheler pictures the most thrilling scenes of the movement for expansion, when at the end of the eighteenth century the men of Kentucky and the old frontier were pushing westward and northward to gain new territory. He sketches the division of an empire before it was won, the advance of untrained soldiers and their terrible fate in the wilderness, and the subsequent stirring campaign which secured the new country. His hero, a soldier with a romantic history, plays with St. Clair a part not unlike that which Washington acted with Braddock.

The period is half a century earlier than that of "Eben Holden"; the locality is the same "Northland" standing over the rugged New England frontier. The war of 1812 furnishes many of the incidents and a description of the Battle of Lake Erie is a notable feature of the story. There is again a quaint New England character with a repertory of shrewd maxims and dry witticisms.

Mrs. Henry Bacon tells the story of a voyage of several weeks on the Nile in a dahabéah, in the late fall of 1899 and the early part of 1900. The voyage began about six miles above Assouan and extended some two hundred miles, returning then to the starting-point. The whole trip was between the first and second cataracts. Mrs. Bacon describes the difficulties of hiring and fitting the boat; the character of the crew; daily life on board; the sights along the shores; explorations of old temples; excursions into the desert; and the natives as she saw them.

Baker, Mrs. L. A., ["Alien," pseud.] Another woman's territory. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1901.] c. 8+315 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Whether it is any worse to take the goods of others, than to take the ideas of another, is the subject of this novel. A man of talent but not of genius is given a manuscript to read, by another man, whom the conviction of crime has made dead to the world. The first man publishes the book as his own; it brings him fame and money. Two women are concerned in the story, which is chiefly a character study. Scene laid in Australia.

It was during a recent visit to Germany which Mr. Baker, accompanied by George Varian, the artist, made in the interests of this work that these things were "seen." Furnished with credentials which afforded him unusual opportunities, this popular magazine writer employed his rare faculty as a gatherer of interesting facts in an intimate study of the German workingman at home and in the shop, the soldier on and off duty, the typical German scientist, the industries and schools—in fact, all sides of German life.

"The wizard's knot" paints a picture of Ireland fifty odd years ago. The action centres in a castle by the sea, so ancient that a great storm brings its massive tower rattling to the ground. The most conspicuous actors are a young baronet, half-crazed by the levity and hard-heartedness of his mother, and Lady Liscarroll, beautiful, faithless, and astute. By the author of "The two standards."

From being a brutally treated bound boy, rescued from an ignorant and cruel master by Judge Northcote, Martin Brook rises from the position of a domestic in the Judge's house to be his adopted son. Slavery and religious liberty are prominent subjects of the novel. Martin Brook differs with the Judge on the right or wrong of sending back a runaway slave and leaves his house. He devotes the rest of his life to preaching the gospel as he understood it, and raising his voice against slavery. The scene is New York state before the war.

Battell, Jos. Ellen; or, the whisperings of an old pine. Middlebury, Vt., Amer. Publishing Co., 1901. c. 11+348+471 p. il. O. cl., $2.

The author calls this a novel, but it is simply a series of conversations between a young girl called "Ellen" and an old pine tree. It discusses the principles used in the construction of the universe, and demonstrates by the great principle of opposites the existence of mind separate from matter, and the immortality of the soul. It also argues that the principle of evolution as taught by scientists is not true, but gives instead that of special creation as the Bible teaches. A larger part of all science as taught today in schools and colleges is declared to be entirely erroneous.

Bayles, G: Ja. Woman and the law; introd. by I. F. Russell. N. Y., Century Co., 1901. c. 12+274 p. D. cl., net, $1.40.

Designed to serve the purposes of a general view of the legal condition of the women of the United States at the present time, and is more especially for the reading of women. The general theme is divided into three parts—domestic relations, public relations, and property rights. Marriage and divorce are the questions chiefly involved in the chapters on domestic relations, and the causes for which divorce is granted in the several states are set forth incidentally. Under public relations is considered woman's political status in the modern state.

Anna Estcourt at twenty-five is pretty weary of the search for a husband, her rich but parvenue sister-in-law has for several London seasons being making for her. She has just rebelled against further campaigns, when an almost forgotten German uncle comes on the scene. He learns to know and love Anna and dies a little while after his return to Germany. When his will is read it is found that he has bequeathed to Anna a comfortable estate at Stralsund. Her life here is told with much humor and realism.

The author is a successful business man who has quietly and carefully studied palmistry as he might study economics or theology. By studying thousands of hands and tracing careers of their owners he has finally formulated as a science the exact laws of nature as written on human hands. He deprecates using the art of palmistry as a pastime, but thinks it should be studied carefully to teach people to know themselves and choose vocations in accordance with their natural gifts.

The "American teachers series," of which this is the first volume, will review the principal subjects of the secondary school curriculum. The purpose is to discuss the educational value of each subject, the reasons for including it in the curriculum, the selection and arrangement of materials in the course, the essential features of class instruction and the various helps which are available for teachers' use. The editor of the series claims no more for the books than "merely contributions to the professional knowledge necessary in secondary education."

Benson, B. K. A friend with the countersign. N. Y., Macmillan, 1901. c. 7+455 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.
A story of the Civil War, like the author's previous story, "Who goes there?" Berwick, the hero, after escaping from the Confederates, whom he has been forced to serve, becomes a spy for Generals Meade and Grant. He has many personal experiences of rare interest; being forced to endure battle in the ranks of his enemies for whom he feigns to fight; he encounters peril by flood, on field, and in fire; but above the personal interest there supervenes a political intrigue which Berwick discovers and counteracts—an intrigue which has for its end the success of the Southern Confederacy through adequate means.

Benson, E: F: The luck of the Vails: a novel. N. Y., Appleton, 1901. c. 6+446 p. D. cl., $1.50.
"The luck of the Vails" was a priceless jewelled cup, carrying a legend which warned its possessor to fear "fire, frost and rain." After it had been lost sight of for many years, it is found accidentally by young Lord Harry Vail, the sole surviving member—excepting a great-uncle—of his family. All the ill luck prophesied comes to him—much of it being brought about by the wicked great-uncle, who is his heir. The narrative is a succession of startling incidents.

East London is that part of Greater London given over mostly to the very poor and is a city in itself. "It is my task," the author says, "to lay before my readers some of the aspects of this city which may redeem it from the charges of monotony and unloveliness." This he does with many charming illustrations in chapters entitled: "What East London is," "The city of the many crafts," "The pool and the riverside," "The factory girl," "The key of the street," "The alien," "The houseless," "The submerged," "The memories of the past," "On sports and pastimes," "The helping hand."

The Lady of Lynn was a three masted full rigged ship engaged in the Lisbon trade. The hero was appointed mate in 1747. The other Lady of Lynn was a wealthy heiress whose guardian tried vainly to guard her from fortune hunters. He cudgels a young man whom he finds making love to his niece. This man vows revenge and carries out a despicable plan which is finally thwarted by the faithful sailor. This last work of the late author has appeared in The Bookman.

Bigelow, Mrs. Poultney. While Charlie was away. N. Y., Appleton, 1901. c. 2+166 p. S. cl., 75 c.

Mrs. Bigelow tells a vivid story of a woman in London "smart" life whose hunger for love involves her in perils, but finds a true way out in the end. Her tale is remarkable for its picture of the feverish craving for excitement, the constant demands of a vanity that fears a loss of attractiveness, and the pathetic underlying desire for real love that are so cleverly suggested in the leading character and illustrated in other figures of the London social environment.

Bittinger, Lucy Forney. The Germans in Colonial times. Phil., Lippincott, 1901, c. 1900. 3-314 p. map, D. cl., $1.50.

A history of German emigration in Colonial times. Beginning with a study of conditions which led to the exodus of noted Germans such as Christopher Dock, Count Zinzendorf, Conrad Weiser, and others who were founders of religious movements in the American Colonies, the author follows with an account of William Penn's visit to Germany and traces the origin of the Labadists, the Moravians, the Dunkers, etc., who settled in Pennsylvania, Georgia, and North Carolina. The part of the Colonial German in the American Revolution is also defined.

The Bastable family were the characters of "The story of the treasure seekers" published in 1899. The first instalment of their adventures closed with the coming of a rich uncle from India. He ended their poverty stricken condition, and in this story they are living in a handsome house with plenty of pocket money and fine clothes. They are still full of mischief—their fresh adventures making the story. They have with them two little visitors. To help each other on the way to reformation they organize the society of "The Wouldbegoods."

The author holds that the human personality does not leave the body at death, but that the germ of life persists, and in due time reappears in another body. He argues that the ultimate perfection of the race will result from the gradual amelioration of the individuals through successive lives. The author supports his arguments by quotations from the Scriptures—assimilating and harmonizing with his religious views the latest teaching of science and philosophy.

The popularity of Miss Brooks' "Dames and daughters of colonial days" led to the request that the author prepare a companion volume dealing with the period immediately following the Revolutionary war. This she has done in a series of eight delightful sketches of celebrated women, like Dolly Madison, Martha Jefferson, Elizabeth Patterson (Madame Bonaparte) and Dorothy Hancock. The papers are not intended in any degree as prosaic biographies of their subjects, but are entertaining side-lights thrown upon them and the well-known people with whom they came in contact.

Brooks, Hildegarde. Without a warrant. N. Y., Scribner, 1901. c. 4+292 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Brown, Alice. Margaret Warrener. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1901. c. 5+301 p. D. cl., $1.50.
The scene is an old-fashioned street in the west end of Boston. Margaret Warrener's husband is more or less drawn away from her by the influence of an unscrupulous woman; but Margaret, instead of throwing up her hands in helplessness, stands by him to the end, and dominates the situation. The characters are of Boston artistic circles, and though the story is tinged with pain, it teaches the triumph of the spirit.

The writer is professor of political economy in the University of Leipzig. In his treatment of economic theory he stands midway between the "younger historical school" of economists and the psychological Austrians. The present volume, which in the original bears the title Die Entstehung der Volkswirtschaftslehre (The rise of national economy), gives the author's conclusions on general industrial development. The ten papers are entitled: Primitive economic conditions; The economic life of primitive peoples; The rise of national economy; A historical survey of industrial systems; The decline of the handicrafts; The genesis of journalism; Union of labour and labour in common; Division of labour; Organization of work and the formation of social classes, etc.

The fifth number in the "American history series" covers the interesting and most important period of the Civil War and Reconstruction. It is eminently a constitutional history in its discussion of the points at issue in the light of public law and political science, but it is also a stirring and graphic account of the events of the war (in which the author was a participator.) An especial feature of the work is its portraiture of the great personalities concerned in the contest on both sides.

Emily Fox-Seton was a girl of good birth left penniless upon the death of her parents. She rents London lodgings with old servants of her mother's and earns a living doing errands for rich people and helping them in their philanthropies. While at a country-house, she meets the Marquis of Walderhurst who finds in her a wholly unselfish, contented, womanly woman and makes her a marchioness.

The heroine is a New England spinster disappointed in an early love and requited in an original fashion. The man she loves dies and intrusts to her his daughter, who so much resembles her father that the European trip on which Miss Pritchard accompanies the girl assumes for her the semblance of the wedding journey she had long since planned to take with the girl's father. It is a pleasant fancy happily carried out.

Burton, J: Bloundelle. The year one: a page of the French Revolution. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1901. c. 8+353 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.
Paris during the French Revolution is the scene. A daughter of the nobility forced by her father to marry an unworthy husband, endeavors to leave him during the first year of the Reign of Terror, aided by an English lieutenant of the navy. A woman enemy discovers the plan and the fugitives are captured and imprisoned charged with high treason. The scenes in Paris during that fearful time of hardship and suffering are described with realism.

A novel of the South in the Civil War. The story is told by a Southern soldier who all through the war longed for the "civilities" of life. The history is correct and the story is full of adventure and surprises. The illustrations by Howard Chandler Christy are a feature of this picture of Southern life before and during the great national struggle.

Caffin, C: H. Photography as a fine art: the achievements and possibilities of photographic art in America. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1901. c. 15+191 p. por. O. cl., net, $3.
The pictorial possibilities of photography are here treated from a sane and dignified standpoint for the first time. What can be done with the camera is shown, not by theorizing, but by actual examples of the work of the greatest American photographers, lucidly explained and commented on by the author. The book lays little emphasis on the mechanics of photography: Mr. Caffin's idea is to show the ambitious worker in this new art what is worth striving for, and how the masters of the camera attain it.

Caine, T: H: Hall. The eternal city. N. Y., Appleton, 1901. c. 5+638 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A modern version of the Biblical story of Samson and Delilah, with the scene in Rome. The "strong man" is David Rossi, a Liberal member of the Italian Parliament. A socialist in practice, his life has been devoted to fighting the battles of the people. He incurs the wrath of Donna Roma, a woman not wholly bad, living under the protection of Baron Bonelli, the Italian Prime Minister, who plots to win him and betray him like the Delilah of old. The narrative is crowded with incidents; descriptions of public festivals, insurrections, plots and counter-plots, etc., follow each other rapidly. The story and characters are purely imaginary; the time even is uncertain.

Although the events in which the hero Ballantyne figures occur partly in England, the story is distinctively American. The heroine is an American girl who goes to England because she is disappointed with her own country and thinks it fails to come up to ideal standards. Its hero, Ballantyne, though American by inheritance, has been brought up in an English home by a mother whose one wish is that he shall never visit America. But to Ballantyne America has been an ideal, and to him it stands for everything which is free and high.

Carey, Dan. Religion and morality. Cin., O., Jennings & Pye, [1901.] c. 92 p. S. cl., 50 c.
Religion in the present treatise is defined as the adjustment of our relation to God and morality as the adjustment of our relationship to our fellow-men. The author endeavors to show that all true Christianity includes morality although many historic Christians have not lived up to the highest standard. His quotation from the wedding service gives the key-note: "What God has joined let not man put asunder."

The "first night" of one of Irving's plays at the Lyceum Theatre, London, is the opening scene. Here Stanley Hay, a brilliant young M. P., accidently is introduced to a beautiful and mysterious young woman, who appears to be a person of importance, as she is being pursued by a German diplomat of an imaginary German kingdom. How Hay wins her for his wife, after many adventures, and discovers that she is a "Serene Highness," is told with much spirit.

This book has grown out of a course in histological technique conducted by the author at the University of Chicago. More space has been devoted to the paraffin method than to any other, because it has proved to be better adapted to the needs of the botanist. The celloidin method, the glycerine method, and free-hand sectioning are also described, and their advantages and disadvantages are pointed out. The first part of the book deals with the principles of fixing and staining, and the various other processes of microtechnique, while in the later chapters these principles are applied to specific cases.

The story opens at the residence of Sir William Johnson, where the hero Cardigan is being brought up with Sir William's children. In the same house is "Silver heels," who becomes the heroine of the love story. The early chapters have to do with the life of Sir William Johnson, with couriers, Indians, Englishmen, and Frenchmen of the frontier. The scene later moves eastward, and the story finally ends with a description of the Concord fight, 1775.

Although the scope of the earlier volumes of this series is quite comprehensive, including in the first volume physics, mechanics, and physiology, and in the second geography, biography, and history, it has been suggested by teachers and critics that the æsthetic side of cyclopædic literature has been in a measure neglected. To fill this suggested want and to help to round out the series into a complete cyclopædia, the "Young folks' cyclopædia of literature and art" has been prepared. Its aim is to give a brief account of the acknowledged masterpieces in literature and in art, the latter term being understood to include architecture, sculpture, painting and music.

The little Huguenots settlement of New Rochelle in America in Colonial times is the scene of the story. The author, however, gives a backward glance to the series of events which led to this transplanting of her heroine and her family from La Rochelle, France, and traces with her the influence of family traditions of the religious wars upon the exiles. While Yvonne, "the daughter of the Huguenots," is an imaginary character, the events through which she moves are historic.

Chenery, Susan. As the twig is bent: a story for mothers and teachers. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1901. c. 4+164 p. D. cl., net, $1.

A book of special interest to parents of young children. It treats of the first seven years of the child's life, and deals largely with the cultivation of character, the teaching of truthfulness, obedience, honor, and reverence. It is an account of a visit to a young mother, and of the conversations that naturally turned on children and the wisest course to start them well on their journey.

Children (The) and the drink; with a preface by the Archbishop of Canterbury. N. Y., M. F. Mansfield & Co., [1901.] 135 p. il. D. pap., net, 75 c.
Embodies the results of an inquiry, conducted in England, by a committee under the Bishop of Hereford, into the injury inflicted by the drink-traffic upon the child-life of the nation. Pt. 1 gives reasons for holding that intemperance is largely, though not exclusively, responsible for the widespread evil of cruelty to children. Pt. 2 dwells on other forms of child-suffering, which are wholly or in part traceable to drink. Pt. 3 urges the passage of a law prohibiting the sale or delivery of drink to children.

A posthumous novel. The first and only one written by a young Englishman, who died suddenly at 25, this year, of heart failure. It is a succession of adventures, which often have a very entertaining and funny side but often also lack probability. The scene is England. The hero is a returned gold hunter from South Africa, who is trying to escape an undesired wife. He allows it to be thought that he has been blown to pieces by dynamite, and lives a queer life, under many disguises. The story of the man who believes himself to be his murderer, verges on tragedy.

Prof. Conn, who in a previous work summarized for the popular reader the evidence for and against the general theory of organic evolution, has now brought the subject up to date by reviewing the present attitude of science toward the various evolutionary theories. The work gives an especially full account of the theories of heredity inaugurated by Weismann, and of the very great changes that they have produced in the view which biologists take to-day in regard to all phenomena connected with evolution and development.

Conrad, Jos., and Hueffer, H: Ford Madox. The inheritors: an extravagant story. N. Y., McClure, Phillips & Co., 1901. c. 3+324 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The publishers say "The inheritors" may be described as a Nietzschean novel, the theme of which is the overthrow of the present moral structure of modern society and the establishment of a new order in which the primitive dictum "might makes right" resumes absolute sway. The heroine of the novel, the type of the "superseder" who is to inherit the earth, is a feminine version of the "uebermensch," or superior being of Nietzsche, who carries his way by sheer force of intellect and intensified animal energy.

The object is to provide within a single volume of moderate size as complete a handbook as possible to the discussions on the policy of the South African war. "Upon the conduct of the war," says the author, "I do not touch. My attempt has been to trace the war back to its ultimate causes, to recall the sequence of events immediately preceding it, to set out the actual course of the negotiations, and to discuss the questions of right and wrong involved in the struggle." The author believes substantially Great Britain has been in the right.

The evils of the marriage of convenience is the theme. An ambitious society mother sacrifices her young daughter to a weak-minded nobleman, who becomes the inmate of an insane asylum, shortly after marriage. The girl leaves her home to unite her fate with that of a well-known Socialist, who believes the marriage ceremony is unnecessary, between a man and woman who sincerely love each other. The novel has its scene in London in the season.

"A pleasant little story, dealing with the fortunes of a certain Zorzi, who was a Dalmatian and a glass-worker in Venice at a time when Venetian law made it a criminal offense for a foreigner to learn the jealously guarded art of glass making. Zorzi's audacity, however, did not stop at this, but he dared to love the daughter of his master, Beroviero, one of the master workers in the glass guild and the richest manufacturer on the Island of Murano."—Commercial Advertiser.

in the installation or operation of electrical plants. v. 2, Distributing system and lamps. N. Y., D. Van Nostrand, Co., 1901. c. 6+505 p. il. O. cl., $3.

This second volume of "Electric lighting" relates to the conductors for transmitting and distributing the current, commonly called the distribution system, to the lamps, the supply of which is the final object of the entire system, and to the various auxiliary devices, such as switches, cut-outs, meters, etc., employed in connection with the same. In short the present volume covers all parts of electric lighting systems outside of the generating plants, the first volume being devoted to the latter. Both volumes are intended as text books for engineering schools and as hand books for practicing engineers.

Crockett, S: Rutherford. Cinderella. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1901. c. 1900, 1901. 5+433 p. il. D. cl., $1.

The only son of the owner of Arioland, in Galloway, marries beneath him in the social scale and is cursed by his father and driven from home. In pursuit of fortune, he discovers rich ruby mines in Burmah; he works them at the risk of his life, returning to his native country to die, but leaving to his motherless daughter, Hester, a bag of rubies of almost priceless value. Hester and the rubies are the centre of many exciting episodes.

Crockett, S: Rutherford. The firebrand. N. Y., McClure, Phillips & Co., 1901. c. 6+516 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A stirring story, moving in Spain at the time when the followers of Maria Christina, and those of Don Carlos, are contesting the right of succession to the throne. The hero, a lovable, hot-headed young Scotchman, appropriately named the "Firebrand," becomes involved with two friends in a Carlist plot to abduct the Queen Regent and little Isabella. The story is full of incident and excitement, and chronicles the love tale of the Scotch hero and his Spanish sweetheart.

Croker, Mrs. Bertha M. Angel: a sketch in Indian ink. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1901. c. 8+376 p. D. cl., $1.50.

"Angel" Gascoigne was born and spent her first nine years in India, neglected by her mother and detested by her stepfather. At her mother's death, her father's cousin, Philip Gascoigne, a Royal Engineer, took charge of the child and sent her to school in England, where she grows into a beautiful and charming girl. To escape a hated marriage into which her grandmother tries to force her, she sells her mother's diamond ring and flees to her guardian in India, only to find that she has horribly outraged the conventions, her guardian turning out to be a distinctly eligible parti instead of the elderly man she had been in the habit of considering him.

In England of the present day the devastators, a handsome man and a beautiful woman, spoil two homes. Peggy Le Marchand comes from Australia with her family that her brothers may be educated in England. She is true and lovable and all a girl should be, but she has not beauty and cannot hold her own against a bewitching widow. The author almost holds the opinion that no beautiful woman can

A portion of the novel has Quebec in the time of Count Frontenac for its scene, but the greater part of it deals with the early days of the French settlement of Detroit. The society of the city of Champlain at the end of the seventeenth and the beginning of the eighteenth centuries is sketched, while the brilliant Gascon chevalier who laid the foundations of our American city of Detroit, with his company of sturdy voyageurs, coureurs de bois, sons of proud seigneurs, and the women who loved them and shared their fortunes, is graphically pictured.

Crowninshield, Mrs. Mary Bradford, [Mrs. Schuyler Crowninshield.] Valencia's garden. N. Y., McClure, Phillips & Co., [1901.] c. 4+303 p. D. cl., $1.50.
Valencia is a young girl fresh from a convent school, married to a Frenchman, who is old enough to be her grandfather. The story takes place in an ancient country house in France, where Valencia's garden is often the scene of the many dramatic episodes. Love and jealousy play a part in the story, as does also a wonderful pearl necklace.

Crozier, J: Beattie. History of intellectual development: on the lines of modern evolution. v. 3, Political, educational, social, including an attempted reconstruction of the politics of England, France and America for the twentieth century. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1901. 14+355 p. O. cl., $3.50.
Mr. Crozier says he has written this, the third volume of his history before the second, partly because of the increasing difficulty, owing to his weakened eye-sight, of pursuing the minute research necessary to the second, and partly because of his not being able to continue the series, he is anxious to put before the reader such practical conclusions bearing on present day affairs—politics, education, government, society, and so on—as follow out of the particular standpoint which he has adopted, namely, that furnished by the history of the evolution of civilization as a whole.

Cruger, Mrs. Julie Storrow, [Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger; "Julien Gordon," pseud.] Mrs. Clyde: the story of a social career. N. Y., Appleton, 1901. c. 2+363 p. D. cl., $1.50.
Mrs. Clyde's identity like other characters in Julien Gordon's society novels is cleverly concealed. When introduced she is the belle of a New England village who is tired of her environment and who has social aspirations. Betrothed to a young suitor, she breaks her engagement and marries a wealthy manufacturer whom it is needless to say is many years her senior. As Mr. Clyde's wife she is for a time a notable figure in the social circles of New York, Boston, and even of Rome.

Glimpses of social life in New York are accompanied by vivid pictures of political life and society in Washington, in this new story of modern society by "Julien Gordon." It is epigrammatically written, and is a good representation of the world of fashion and intrigue.

Davis, W: Stearns. God wills it: a tale of the first crusade; il. by L: Betts. N. Y., Macmillan, 1901. c. 8+552 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.
Pope Gregory VII. when dying called on his followers to vow to go on the crusade "When God wills it." This became the battle cry between 1094 and 1099 A.D. The story shifts from Palermo to Sicily, to Auvergne in central France and thence to Syria. The fanaticism of the Christians and the Moslems, and the belief that heaven could be won by sword-play underlie the plot. Godfrey of Bouillon, Tancred, Peter the Hermit, and Pope Urban II. are among the characters.

The basis of this volume is eight lectures given before the Lowell Institute in Boston in 1894. The author went among the Western tribes of Indians with the second Colorado expedition with John Wesley Powell, founder of the Bureau of American Ethnology. He treats the Indians as a by-gone race. The author desires to rouse students to collect material that is now obtainable, but which will shortly be gone forever and to arouse a deeper public interest in the gathering of this material. His dissertations on the material already collected form an important feature of his book.

De Vars, Michon, (pseud.) In re Molineux versus a current Cagliostro. Providence, R. I., Arthur W. Brown, 1901. c. 139 p. obl. D. cl., $3.

A review of the Molineux case and the case of Dr. Graves, both accused of poisoning. The writer has a theory about the two cases, which were somewhat alike in detail, which his book is designed to sustain. He believes both men were the victims of a third party, who is the real criminal—a man with a mania for poisoning.

Intended to give information about the correctness of type-setting, which is not minutely taught in English grammars or clearly explained in technical manuals of printing. The work is the outcome of the author's experience of fifty years as middleman between author and compositor, and in its preparation he has had the aid and advice of many able printers, editors and teachers. The methods suggested by it are those which have the sanction of usage, and are ample warnings against the common errors of printing.

Diffenderffer, Frank Ried. The German immigration into Pennsylvania through the port of Philadelphia, 1700 to 1775. In 2 pts. Pt. 2, The redemptioners. Prepared at the request of the Pennsylvania-German Soc. Lancaster, Pa., pub. by the author, Frank Ried Diffenderffer, 1900. c. 4+330 p. il. por. O. cl., $3. [Ed. limited to 250 copies.]
This work deals with two of the least familiar chapters in the history of the Province of Pennsylvania, bringing together in a full and consecutive narrative all that is known concerning these subjects. "The Redemptioners" treats of the system of indentured or bond servants, that prevailed in all the colonies in the early days. There are twenty-two full-page insets, covering the domestic life, household utensils, and other phases of German pioneer life in Pennsylvania. Other illustrations consist of maps, autographs, facsimiles of rare tracts relating to Pennsylvania, buildings, head and tail pieces, etc.

The noted writer, Mary A. Dodge, known to the world as "Gail Hamilton," was throughout her life in the habit of writing frequent letters to her family and friends, minute in description and keen in criticism. These letters not only present her life more fully than it could be told by another, but deal most intimately with literary and political leaders of her day. They are introduced by a letter from her friend, J: G. Whittier, and a biographical sketch by Harriet Prescott Spofford.
